patris—Charidemus—Nero—Epigram.

PREFACE

The Solecist, The Ass, Affairs of the Heart, Halcyon, Demosthenes, Podagra, Ocypus and The Cynic were relegated to this volume because there are good reasons for doubting the Lucianic authorship of some if not all of these works, though they are found in Γ and other good manuscripts. Philopatris, Charidemus and Nero together with the epigram "On His Own Book" are certainly not by Lucian and are only found in a few inferior manuscripts.

In addition various letters have been ascribed to Lucian in inferior manuscripts; for details see M. Wittek's Liste des Manuscrits de Lucien in Scriptorium 1952. These are in the main Phalaris Letters, which were no doubt ascribed to Lucian because of confusion with his Phalaris A and B; but there are also ten Scythian Letters purporting to be from Anacharsis to (1) the Athenians, (2) Solon, (3-10) various other individuals. The style of these Scythian Letters has nothing to suggest that Lucian is the author, and the fact that they occur at the end of Lucian's Anacharsis shows how they found their way into Lucian's works. However, as one of the manuscripts containing the Scythian Letters is the respectable Laurentianus 57.51 (L), they have no doubt as good a claim to appear in this volume as such pseudo-Lucianea as Charidemus, Philopatris, and Nero. Space however does not permit this; those who wish to read the Scythian Letters will find them on pp. 102-105 of Hercher's Epistolographi Graeci, or in F. H. Reuter's Die Briefe des Anacharsis (Berlin, 1963).

PREFACE

It should also be mentioned that the Lucianic manuscript Vaticanus Graecus 87 contains a dialogue entitled Τιμαρίων ἡ περὶ τῶν κατ' αὐτὸν παθημάτων, but this work is Byzantine and can be dated to the twelfth century A.D. It found its way into Vaticanus 87 because it is a satirical dialogue strongly influenced by Lucian in general and the Necyomanteia in particular. See H. F. Tozer's account in Journal of Hellenic Studies, 1881, pp. 241-270.

I have based my text for the Solecist on Nilén's Teubner, and for Podagra and Ocypus on Zimmermann's edition. Elsewhere I have prepared my own text by collation of the manuscripts; I have been considerably helped in this task by use of Nilén's accurate collations of Γ, Β and Ε. I have also found Albers' critical edition of "Demosthenis Encomium" of great value. I also had the benefit of Harmon's translation of the Solecist, Halcyon and part of Affairs of the Heart (this title for the Amores is his), together with Rouse's version of part of The Ass.

I should like to thank the Rev. J. H. Davies for his help with Philopatris and Mr. W. J. F. Davies for correcting the proofs.

LUCIAN

THE SHAM SOPHIST or THE SOLECIST

This dialogue has been rejected as non-Lucianic by many authorities on the ground that it is unworthy of Lucian's talents and seems to criticise a number of Lucian's own usages. Harmon agreed with this view and suggested that it may have been the work of an unknown schoolmaster who had lived in Egypt (cf. c. 5) and had read Lexiphanes (cf. c. 11). This view may well be correct. See, however, my article in Classical Quarterly, 1956, where I argue that this dialogue could indeed be by Lucian and is best taken as a spiteful and at times hypocritical attack on a personal enemy who has offended Lucian by criticising his Greek.

An attractive alternative interpretation is Reitz's suggestion that, if the Solecist is by Lucian, the contributions of Lucian and Socrates are intended to be ironical and constitute a "reductio ad absurdum" of the activities of the more extravagant Atticists of the day. This view has recently been supported by J. Bompaire (Lucien Écrivain) and B. Baldwin (Classical Review, 1962) who suggests that someone like Phrynichus of Bithynia, a contemporary of Lucian, or Moeris (of unknown date) may be satirised. This view has the advantage of making the dialogue reputable satire and also accounting for the condemnation of Lucianic usages, but is perhaps too subtle.

Lucian did have a great interest in linguistic minutiae and was capable of writing tediously on them, as in the Slip of the Tongue (vol. 6, pp. 171 ff.), which can hardly be a "reductio ad absurdum" as it was addressed to a patron rather than to critics. Lucian's pronouncements all seem seriously meant, and Socrates' views seem to be quoted with approval. Moreover, in general, they are just those views which one would expect of Lucian, as Socrates recommends Platonic usages (cf. Lexiphanes c. 22, F. W. Householder, Literary Quotation and Allusion in Lucian, p. 44), but shows a sense of proportion by objecting to usages already obsolescent. If some Lucianic usages are criticised in this dialogue, we should bear in mind that Lucian was a prolific and at times careless writer who could be hypocritical in his personal feuds, and that the reference to Egypt in c. 5 perhaps suggests a late date when Lucian's powers were failing.

It is impossible to produce an adequate translation of this dialogue, as some of the deliberate mistakes are outrageously gross, while others could only have offended the hypercritical. I have contented myself with introducing an obvious blunder in the English, wherever there seems to be a deliberate mistake, however venial, in the Greek. It is hardly necessary to point out that any blunder in the English is not identical with the error in the Greek. The nature of any Greek blunder is explained in a relevant footnote.

1. Is the man who is clever at detecting howlers in the speech of another able to guard against making them himself?

SOPHIST

I for one think so.

LUCIAN

And the man who can't guard against howlers in his own speech can't recognise them in another?

SOPHIST

True enough.

LUCIAN

And what about yourself? Do you say that you don't make any ² howlers, or how are we to describe you?

$\phi\eta\varsigma$ $\omicron\upsilon$ for $\omicron\upsilon$ $\phi\eta\varsigma$ (cf. p. 26) is probably not a deliberate mistake; it cannot be one of the three mistakes admitted on p. 8 and $\phi\eta\varsigma$ $\mu\eta$ is used seriously on p. 22.

LUCIAN

ΣΟΦΙΣΤΗΣ

Ἀπαίδευτος γὰρ ἂν εἶην, εἰ σολοικίζοιμι τηλικούτος ὢν.

ΛΟΥΚΙΑΝΟΣ

Οὐκοῦν καὶ ἕτερον φωρᾶσαι δυνήσῃ τοῦτο δρῶντα καὶ ἐλέγξαι τὸν ἀρνούμενον;

ΣΟΦΙΣΤΗΣ

Παντάπασί γε.

ΛΟΥΚΙΑΝΟΣ

Ἴθι νῦν ἐμοῦ λαβοῦ σολοικίζοντος, ἄρτι δὲ σολοικιῶ.

ΣΟΦΙΣΤΗΣ

Οὐκοῦν εἰπέ.

ΛΟΥΚΙΑΝΟΣ

Ἄλλ' ἐγωγε ἤδη τὸ δεινὸν εἴργασμαι, σὺ δὲ οὐκ ἐπέγνως.

ΣΟΦΙΣΤΗΣ

Παίζεις ἔχων;

ΛΟΥΚΙΑΝΟΣ

Μὰ τοὺς θεούς· ἐπεὶ σολοικίσας ἔλαθόν σε ὥς οὐκ ἐπιστάμενον. αὖθις δὲ σκόπει· οὐ γάρ σέ φημι δύνασθαι κατανοῆσαι, ἐπεὶ ἃ μὲν οἶσθ', ἃ δ' οὐκ οἶσθα.

¹ ἄρτι with the future is also condemned by Phrynichus and not used by the best writers.

THE SOLECIST

SOPHIST

Well, I should be ignorant if I made them at my age.

LUCIAN

Then you'll also be able to catch someone else out when he makes them and prove your point when he denies it ?

SOPHIST

Certainly.

LUCIAN

Come now and catch me in my howlers ; I'll start the ¹ now.

SOPHIST

Start then.

LUCIAN

But I've already perpetrated the enormity, though you didn't recognise it.

SOPHIST

Are you always joking ?

LUCIAN

Good heavens no ! You let me get away with a howler because you didn't know any better. Pay attention once more. I say you can't catch me, because there are things what ² you know and things what you don't.

¹ ἃ μὲν . . . ἃ δὲ (for τὰ μὲν . . . τὰ δὲ) is fairly common in Hellenistic Greek; Lucian himself is guilty of this usage in Timon 57 and A Professor of Public Speaking 15. Cf. also The Ass 23.

LUCIAN

ΣΟΦΙΣΤΗΣ

Εἰπέ μόνον.

ΛΟΥΚΙΑΝΟΣ

Ἄλλὰ καὶ νῦν σεσολοίκισταί μοι, σὺ δ' οὐκ ἔγνως.

ΣΟΦΙΣΤΗΣ

Πῶς γάρ, σοῦ μηδὲν λέγοντος;

ΛΟΥΚΙΑΝΟΣ

Ἐγὼ μὲν λέγω καὶ σολοικίζω, σὺ δ' οὐχ ἔπη τοῦτο δρῶντι· ἐπεὶ ὄφελον καὶ νῦν ἀκολουθῆσαι δυνήσῃ.

ΣΟΦΙΣΤΗΣ

2. Θαυμασὰ λέγεις, εἰ μὴ δυνήσομαι καταμαθεῖν σολοικισμόν.

ΛΟΥΚΙΑΝΟΣ

Καὶ πῶς ἂν δύναιο τὸν ἓνα μαθεῖν τοὺς τρεῖς ἀγνοήσας;

ΣΟΦΙΣΤΗΣ

Τίνας τρεῖς;

ΛΟΥΚΙΑΝΟΣ

Ὅλους ἀρτιγενεῖους.

ΣΟΦΙΣΤΗΣ

Ἐγὼ μὲν σε παίζω δοκῶ.

THE SOLECIST

SOPHIST

Just say something.

LUCIAN

But I've just made another howler, though you didn't notice it.

SOPHIST

How so, when you say nothing ?

LUCIAN

I am saying things and making howlers, but you don't keep up with me as I do it. I hope¹ you can follow me this time.

SOPHIST

2. I'm surprised to hear you say I won't be able to recognise a howler.

LUCIAN

How could you recognise one when in your ignorance you've missed three ?

SOPHIST

What three ?

LUCIAN

Three whole bearded monsters I've just perjured² up.

SOPHIST

I think you're joking.

¹ A gross mistake involving (a) the late usage of ὀφελον for ὀφέλες, and (b) its combination with a future indicative.

² ἀπριγερείους is wrongly used for ἀπριγερείς ("new-bearded" for "new-born").

LUCIAN

Ἐγὼ δὲ <σέ>¹ ἀγνοεῖν τὸν ἀμαρτάνοντα ἐν τοῖς λόγοις.

ΣΟΦΙΣΤΗΣ

Καὶ πῶς ἂν τις μάθοι μηδενὸς εἰρημένου;

ΛΟΥΚΙΑΝΟΣ

Λέλεκται καὶ σεσολοίκισται τετραπλῇ,² σὺ δ' οὐκ ἔγνως. μέγα οὖν ἄθλον κατέπραξας ἂν, εἴπερ ἔγνως.

ΣΟΦΙΣΤΗΣ

Οὐ μέγα μὲν, ἀναγκαῖον δὲ τῷ ὁμολογήσαντι.

ΛΟΥΚΙΑΝΟΣ

Ἄλλ' οὐδὲ νῦν ἔγνως.

ΣΟΦΙΣΤΗΣ

Πότε³ νῦν;

ΛΟΥΚΙΑΝΟΣ

Ὅτε τὸ ἄθλον ἔφην σε καταπραῖσαι.

² τετραπλῇ N: τριπλῇ Bγ.

³ πότε; ΛΟΥΚ. νῦν ὅτε . . . β.

THE SOLECIST

LUCIAN

And I that you don't know when a man makes howlers in his talk.

SOPHIST

How can anyone know when nothing has been said ?

LUCIAN

Things have been said and four howlers made, so that you would have achieved a great succession¹ if you had recognised them.

SOPHIST

Not a great one but the minimum requirement now that I've let myself in for this.

LUCIAN

But even now you didn't notice.

SOPHIST

When just now ?

LUCIAN

When I talked of your achieving a succession.

SOPHIST

I don't know what you mean.

LUCIAN

ΛΟΥΚΙΑΝΟΣ

Ὁρθῶς ἔφησ· οὐ γὰρ οἶσθα. καὶ πρόιθι γε ἐς τὸ ἔμπροσθεν· οὐ γὰρ ἐθέλεις ἔπεσθαι, συνήσων ἄν, εἴπερ ἐβελήσεις.

ΣΟΦΙΣΤΗΣ

3. Ἄλλ' ἐγὼ βούλομαι· σὺ δ' οὐδὲν εἶπας ὧν ἄνθρωποι σολοικίζοντες λέγουσιν.

ΛΟΥΚΙΑΝΟΣ

Τὸ γὰρ νῦν ῥηθὲν μικρόν τί σοι φαίνεται κακὸν εἶναι; ὅμως δὲ ἀκολουθήσον αὐτίς, ἐπεὶ οὐκ ἔμαθες ἐκδραμόντα.

ΣΟΦΙΣΤΗΣ

Μὰ τοὺς θεοὺς οὐκ ἔγωγε.

ΛΟΥΚΙΑΝΟΣ

Ἄλλὰ μὴν μεθῆκα θεῖν λαγὼ ταχέως. ἄρα παρῆξεν¹; ἀλλὰ καὶ νῦν ἔξεστιν ἰδεῖν τὸν λαγὼ· εἰ δὲ μή, πολλοὶ γενόμενοι λαγὼ λήσουσί σε ἐν σολοικισμῷ πεσόντες.

² The intentional mistake may be ἄν with the future (cf. p. 26), though this is used occasionally in Attic and by Lucian (cf. Fisherman 29, Anacharsis 17, 25, 31, etc.); or the error may simply be the failure to use the more normal present (or aorist) participle with ἄν when with an optative protasis.

THE SOLECIST

LUCIAN

You're right there ; you don't. Advance forward into the lead ¹ then, as you don't want to follow, though you shall ² be able to understand if you should wish.

SOPHIST

3. But I do wish ; but you've said none of the things which men say in making howlers.

LUCIAN

Then you think what I said just now a trifling fault ? Nevertheless follow me once more, since you didn't notice what came rushing out.

SOPHIST

Good heavens, I certainly didn't.

LUCIAN

But look here's a hare who ³ I've just let rush out. Did it dash past you ? You can still see the hare to who I refer. If you can't, there will be hordes of the misbegotten hares whom ³ will dash past you unnoticed.

The context perhaps suggests that nominative plural λαγῶ is to be regarded as a mistake for λαγοί ; this, if seriously meant, is a piece of excessive pedantry based on the fact that λαγοί is Sophoclean, whereas λαγῶ has no better authority than Eupolis. Generally speaking, however, λαγῶς is Attic, λαγός Ionic and λαγῶς epic, but cf. Athenaeus 9.400. Lucian has λαγῶς three times and λαγῶς four times but no nominative plural form.

ΣΟΦΙΣΤΗΣ

Οὐ λήσουσιν.

ΛΟΥΚΙΑΝΟΣ

Καὶ μὴν ἔλαθόν γε.

ΣΟΦΙΣΤΗΣ

Θαυμαστὰ λέγεις.

ΛΟΥΚΙΑΝΟΣ

Σὺ δὲ ὑπὸ τῆς ἄγαν παιδείας διέφθορας, ὥστε μηδ' αὐτὸ τοῦτο σολοικίζοντας κατανοῆσαι. [οὐ γὰρ πρόσεστιν αὐτῷ τὸ τίνα.]¹

ΣΟΦΙΣΤΗΣ

4. Ταῦτα μὲν οὐκ οἶδα πῶς λέγεις · ἐγὼ δὲ πολλοὺς ἤδη σολοικίζοντας κατενόησα.

ΛΟΥΚΙΑΝΟΣ

Κἀμὲ τοίνυν εἶση τότε, ὅταν τι τῶν παιδίων γένῃ τῶν τὰς τίτθας θηλαζόντων πιούσας.² εἰ³ οὐ νῦν ἔγνωσ σολοικίζοντά με, οὐδὲ ἀνξάνοντα παιδιά σολοικισμόν ποιήσει τῷ μηδὲν εἰδότη.

THE SOLECIST

SOPHIST

They won't get by me.

LUCIAN

But look they're already by you.

SOPHIST

I'm surprised to hear it.

LUCIAN

Too much learning has been your underdoing ¹; so you see there's another howler people make without your noticing.

SOPHIST

4. I don't know what you mean by that. I've noticed many people making howlers in my time.

LUCIAN

Then you'll know that I've done so too—on the day when you become one of the babies to whom their nurses give suckle.² If you hasn't ³ caught me making a howler this time, you'll be too ignorant to find any howlers no matter how big the child's ⁴ grow.

SOPHIST

True enough.

¹ The intransitive use of διέφθορα (common in late prose) is also censured by Phrynichus and others; διέφθορα is transitive in Attic.

² The mistake may be in applying θηλάζω in the sense of "suck" to humans; if πιούσας is retained, there is perhaps no deliberate mistake as θηλάζω in the sense of "suckle" has good authority, whether applied to humans or animals.

³ εἰ οὐ may be criticised; it occurs occasionally in Attic, cf. Zeus Catechised 5, Parasite 12, Praise of Demosthenes 21.

⁴ The intransitive use of αὔξαι (not in the best Attic writers) is criticised.

LUCIAN

ΛΟΥΚΙΑΝΟΣ

Καὶ μὴν εἰ ταῦτα ἀγνοήσομεν, οὐδὲν γνωσόμεθα τῶν ἑαυτῶν, ἐπεὶ καὶ τόδε σολοικισθὲν ἀπέφυγέ σε. μὴ τοίνυν ἔτι λέγειν, ὥς ἱκανὸς εἶ κατιδεῖν τὸν σολοικίζοντα καὶ αὐτὸς μὴ σολοικίζειν.

5. Καγὼ μὲν οὕτως. Σωκράτης δὲ ὁ ἀπὸ Μόμφου, ὧ συνεγενόμην ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ, τὰ τοιαῦτα ἔλεγεν ἀνεπαχθῶς καὶ οὐκ ἤλεγχε τὸν ἀμαρτάνοντα.

Πρὸς μέντοι τὸν ἐρωτήσαντα πηνίκα ἔξειςιν, Τίς γὰρ ἄν, ἔφη, <φαίη>¹ σοι περὶ τῆς τήμερον ὥς ἐξιών; ἐτέρου δὲ φήσαντος, Ἰκανὰ ἔχω τὰ πατρώα, Πῶς φῆς; εἶπε· τέθνηκεν γὰρ ὁ πατήρ σοι; ἄλλου δὲ ἀδθις λέγοντος, Πατριώτης ἔστι μοι· Ἐλάνθανες ἄρα ἡμᾶς, ἔφη, βάρβαρος ὢν. ἄλλου δὲ εἰπόντος,

² The infinitive for imperative may be meant as a mistake, though it occurs in Attic; cf. The Ignorant Book Collector 7, Professor of Public Speaking 10, Mistaken Critic 16, Saturnalia 21.

³ Socrates of Mopsus is unknown. Mopsus is presumably a placename, and perhaps Mopsuestia in Cilicia. It is tempting, however, to identify Socrates with Demonax of Cyprus of whom Lucian says ἐπὶ μήκιστον συνεγενόμην (Demonax 1), that he was like Socrates (ibid. 5), that he criticised in a nice way (6), and had a healthy contempt for archaisms and barbarisms (26); but no Mopsus is known in Cyprus. The Etymologicum Magnum does quote once

LUCIAN

However if we remain ignorant of these ones, we won't recognise any made by we¹ ourselves, for there's another one you missed. So never again to² claim you're competent to spot howlers made by others and to avoid them yourself.

5. Well that's my way of putting the matter; but Socrates of Mopsus,³ whom I knew⁴ in Egypt, used to put that sort of thing tactfully without showing up the offender.

To the man who asked him the hour⁵ he was leaving home, he replied, "Who could answer such an untimely question? I've already left for to-day."

When another said, "I'm the possessor⁶ of no mean hereditament," he asked, "How do you mean? Is your father dead then?"

When yet another said, "He's a townec⁷ of mine," he said, "You didn't tell us you hailed from the wilds."

from "Socrates the grammarian" but the text seems doubtful.

⁴ Or perhaps "under whom I studied"; cf. preceding note.

⁷ πατριώτης (as opposed to πολλῆτης) should only be used of non-Greeks as having no πάλις. Cf. Pollux, 3, 54.

⁴ διὰ . . . μ del. E. H. Warmington.

⁵ δὲ S: om. cett. codd..

² The mistake is now lost from the Greek; Socrates' reply suggests he may be objecting to a poetic word for two, or a dual form, or an incorrect reduplication.

³ The mistake is in using λῆμμα (gain) for λῆμα (spirit).

⁴ μείραξ should be used of girls.

⁵ δεδίττομαι means "frighten" not "fear" in Attic.

⁶ Phrynichus also condemns this tautological superlative used in Alexander 30, Parasite 42, How To Write History 34.

⁷ The intransitive use of ἐξορμῶ (not found in good Attic prose) is censured but cf. Dialogues of the Dead 25, 2, True Story 2, 4.

⁸ The mistake is ἐξ ἐπιπολῆς (found in Nigrinus 35) for ἐπιπολῆς. It should perhaps be written as one word,

THE SOLECIST

When someone else said, "So-and-so is a drunken¹ mother's son," he said, "Does his mother drink? Or what do you mean?"

When someone else said "<Twofold?> lions,"² he said, "You're doubling your lions."

When another man said, "He's a man of talents"³ (instead of using "talent" in the singular), he said, "Then he'll be in the money, if he's got talents."

When another said, "My friend, that filly⁴ of a lad, will be coming," he said, "Why then insult your friend? He's no girl."

To the man who said "I affright⁵ the man and run away from him," he said, "Then you'll be the pursuer even when you're afraid of someone."

When another said, "My chiefest friend,"⁶ he said, "How clever of you to elevate him above your chief friend!"

When someone said, "I speed⁷ forth," he said, "Whom do you speed forth?"

When a man said, "From⁸ outside," he said, "From the outside, like from the bottom of the barrel."

When someone said, "He gave me my marching orders,"⁹ he said, "Xenophon also gave his troops their order of march."

as Phrynichus criticises it as wrongly formed on the analogy of ἐξαίφνης. Phrynichus rightly recommends the adverbial ἐπιπολῆς (found in Attic and True Story 2.2, Dialogues of the Courtesans 9.2); Socrates less correctly sanctions the late noun ἐπιπολή.

² Socrates objects to συγκρίνομαι with the dative (perhaps found in Parasite 51) in the sense of "contend with". Phrynichus similarly prefers διάκρισις to σύγκρισις in the sense of "comparison".

³ I.e. "when using bookish language", like Lexiphanes (vol. v, pp. 291 seq.). ⁴ νῶι is wrongly used for νῶν.

THE SOLECIST

When another said, "I got round¹ him and escaped without his noticing," he said, "It's surprising that one individual could get round another."

When someone else said, "He invited comparison to² him", he said, "Yes, and he certainly invited criticism."

6. He was also in the habit of poking inoffensive fun at people making howlers when Atticising.³ To the man who said, "This is the opinion of we⁴ twain," he said, "You can also tell us twain we're wrong."

When another man was eagerly recounting a piece of local lore and said, "When that she had known⁵ Heracles," he asked, "Didn't Heracles then know her?"

When someone said, "I must needs be sheared,"⁶ he said, "Why, what beastly thing have you done that such an indignity should fall on your head?"

When someone talked of being at war with his wife,⁷ he asked whether she was a national enemy.

When another referred to his sick boy as suffering torture,⁸ he said, "Why? What is his torturer after?"

When someone said, "He's advancing⁹ in his studies," he said that Plato calls it "progressing."

² Socrates objects to the figurative use of βασανίζεσθαι in the sense of "to be tortured" (not found in Attic).

μελετήσῃ οὐ δαίνα, Πῶς οὖν, ἔφη, ἐμὲ ἐρωτῶν εἰ μελετήσομαι, λέγεις ὅτι οὐ δαίνα;

7. Ἀττικίζοντος δέ τινος καὶ τεθνήξει εἰπόντος ἐπὶ τοῦ τρίτου, Βέλτιον, ἔφη, καὶ ἐνταῦθα μὴ ἀττικίζειν καταρῶμενον. καὶ πρὸς τὸν εἰπόντα δὲ στοχάζομαι αὐτοῦ ἐπὶ τοῦ φείδομαι αὐτοῦ, Μή τι, ἔφη, διήμαρτες βαλὼν; ἀφιστᾶν δέ τινος εἰπόντος καὶ ἑτέρου ἀφιστάνειν, Ταῦτα μὲν,¹ ἔφη, οὐκ οἶδα. πρὸς δὲ τὸν λέγοντα πλὴν εἰ μή, Ταῦτα, ἔφη, διπλᾶ χαρίζη. καὶ χρᾶσθαι δὲ τινος εἰπόντος, Ψευδαττικόν, ἔφη, τὸ ῥῆμα. τῷ δὲ λέγοντι ἔκτοτε, Καλόν, ἔφη, τὸ εἰπεῖν ἐκπέρυσι, ὃ γὰρ Πλάτων ἐς τότε λέγει. τῷ δὲ ἰδοῦ ἐπὶ τοῦ ἰδέχρωμένου τινός, Ἔτερα ἀνθ' ἑτέρων, ἔφη, σημαίνεις. ἀντιλαμβάνομαι δὲ ἐπὶ τοῦ συνήμι λέγοντός τινος, θαυμάζειν ἔφη πῶς ἀντιποιούμενος τοῦ λέγοντος φῆς μὴ ἀντιποιεῖσθαι. βράδιον δέ τινος

² Socrates does exactly the same thing again, objecting to τεθνήξω (an Attic alternative for θανοῦμαι) as opposed to τεθνήξομαι (in current use, e.g. Charon 8, Salaried Posts 31).

³ στοχάζομαι is used quite wrongly for φείδομαι.

⁴ Socrates rightly objects to ἀφιστᾶν and ἀφιστάνειν as non-Attic alternatives for ἀφιστάναι.

⁶ Socrates rightly objects to χρᾶσθαι for χρῆσθαι.

⁷ ἔκτοτε is a late usage (e.g. The Ass 45) also censured by Phrynichus; Socrates retorts by inventing the preposterous ἐκπέρυσι on the same analogy.

THE SOLECIST

When someone asked, "Wilt¹ so-and-so discourse?" he said, "Why ask me if I'm going to discourse and then add so-and-so?"

7. When an Atticiser said, "Shalt² shuffle off this mortal coil" (though he meant the third person), "It's better to refrain from Atticising in this world if you're going to curse me."

To the man who said, "I'm letting off³ at that wight" (instead of "I'm letting him off"), he said, "Methinks you have missed your mark."

When someone said "to get putten⁴ away" and another, "to get putted away," he said, "These terms are unfamiliar to me."

To the man who said, "save unless,"⁵ he said, "It's kind of you to give us double measure."

When a man said "to enjoy usufract,"⁶ he said, "That's a bad old word."

To the man who said, "hitherafter,"⁷ he said that "Last year after" must be an excellent expression, seeing that Plato used "hitherto."

To the man who used the phrase "look here"⁸ instead of "look," he said, "You say one thing and mean another."

When a man said "I reprehend⁹ you," instead of "I comprehend you," he said he wondered how the man could be a follower of the speaker and yet say he didn't follow him.

² Socrates objects to ἀντιλαμβάνομαι for "understand," as its normal meaning in Plato is "reprehend."

εἰπόντος, Οὐκ ἔστιν, ἔφη, ὅμοιον τῷ τάχιον. βαρεῖν δέ τινος εἰπόντος, Οὐκ ἔστιν, ἔφη, τὸ βαρύνειν ἢ νενόμικας. λέλογχα δὲ τὸ εἴληχα λέγοντος, Ὀλίγων,¹ ἔφη, καὶ παρ' οἷς ἀμαρτάνεται. ἵπτασθαι δὲ ἐπὶ τοῦ πέτεσθαι² πολλῶν λεγόντων, Ὅτι μὲν ἀπὸ τῆς πτήσεως τὸ ὄνομα, σαφῶς ἴσμεν. περιστερόν δέ τινος εἰπόντος ὡς δὴ Ἀττικόν, Καὶ τὸν φάττον ἐροῦμεν, ἔφη. φακὸν δέ τινος εἰπόντος ἐδηδοκέναι, Καὶ πῶς ἂν, ἔφη, φακὸν τις φάγοι³; ταῦτα μὲν τὰ Σωκράτεια.

³ φάγοι Fritzschē: φάγη codd..

² Socrates wrongly insists that βαρεῖν should be intransitive; it is transitive in Plato Symposium 203 b, and in Dialogues of the Dead 20.4 and Action 5.

³ Socrates objects to λέλογχα (εἴληχα is used in the best Attic prose). Cf. Δελόγχει Affairs of the Heart 18, but εἴληχαι ibid. 24.

⁴ ἵπτασθαι is rightly condemned here, and is censured as a barbarism in Lexiphanes 25, and by Phrynichus. It occurs, however (in compounds), in Judgement of the Goddesses 5 and 6, Downward Journey 2, Dream 16.

The form recommended by Socrates is probably πέτεσθαι, as it is the best Attic form, is preferred to πέτασθαι by

THE SOLECIST

When a man said "more tardier,"¹ he said that was a different thing from "more quicker."

When a man said "to press,"² he said, "That's not the same thing as 'to depress' as you thought."

When someone said "gotten"³ for "got," he said, "That's not used by many people, and they move in the wrong circles."

When a great number of people said, "flee⁴ through the air" for "fly through the air," he remarked, "We can be quite sure that something flighty is involved."

When someone thought he was being scholarly by talking of a "woodhen,"⁵ he said, "Let's call it a jill-snipe."

When a man said he'd eaten a potager of pulse,⁶ he asked how anyone could eat so repulsive a dish.

8. So much for Socrates' views. But now let us return, if you will, to our contest of words as before. And I shall summon the best of them to come all and one,⁷ and you must recognise them. For I think Lucian (cf. Lover of Lies 13, Dialogues of the Courtesans 1.2, Ass 4, 12, 13) and is recommended by Phrynichus. πέρασθαι is expressly condemned in Mistaken Critic 29.

² Socrates objects to the usage of φакός for φакή. According to Herodian φакός should be used of raw, φакή of cooked lentils, but the rule is not observed in Attic comedy or late Greek. Socrates retorts by punning on φакός in its current sense of "bottle."

³ Perhaps δλους in the sense of "omnes" rather than "totos" (cf. c. 2) is censured; or a mistake may be concealed in the (probably corrupt) infinitive.

The mistake is in not using the normal Attic —έας for the accusative plural of a noun in —εῖς. Lucian normally has —έας (Ship 31, Toxaris 49, True Story 2.34, etc.) but —εῖς occurs in Ship 46 and Ass 23.

LUCIAN

9. I quite agree; there's nothing obvious about "between you and I" instead of "between you and me." No that's obvious enough, but no god would stop you from being an ignoramus except Apollo. He at any rate learns⁴ anyone who consults him. But you didn't even notice him learning them.

SOPHIST

Heavens no! I didn't.

³ σφᾶς ἀνδρός for ἡμᾶς ἀνδρός is a mistake unparalleled in Attic and very rare elsewhere; but cf. note on εἰπῶν (c. 4) and the late Greek use of σφέτερος for ὑμέτερος.

⁴ μαντεύομαι in the sense of "give an oracle" is regarded as a mistake, though found in Demosthenes and the normal meaning in Lucian (Alexander 19, Dialogues of the Dead 10.1, 25.2, etc.); the usual Attic meaning (consult an oracle) occurs once in Lucian (Dialogues of the Dead 23.1).

SOPHIST

What does it matter to me if a man who sets his ³ cap at a girl is wrong ?

² The mistake is probably the tautological use of αὐτῷ with the middle μνηστεύομαι ; Lucian does exactly this in Salaried Posts 23.

³ The sophist by omitting αὐτῷ misses the point.

THE SOLECIST

LUCIAN

Only that the one who claims to know is ignorant. Well so much for that. But if a man were to come and tell you that he was divorcing¹ from his wife, would you allow him ?

SOPHIST

Of course I would, if he were obviously the injured party.

LUCIAN

But if he were obviously ungrammatical, would you let him do so ?

SOPHIST

I certainly wouldn't.

LUCIAN

You're quite right. For one shouldn't let a friend make a grammatical error, but instruct him how to avoid it. And if anyone were now to rattle at the door on his way in or knock it on his way out,² what effect shall we say it has on you ?

SOPHIST

None on me ; but we can say he wished to come in or go out.

THE SOLEICIST

something other gates,¹ if you don't mind. In the first place to say "something" and not "some things" is clearly right when in conjunction with "other-gates." To do otherwise would be illogical. Next there's the question of my having offended you, as you claim. If I were to put things differently and say I had offended against you, the phrase has a particular meaning.

SOPHIST

About that I can't say.

LUCIAN

Yes indeed, for to offend you is to offend your person² with blows or chains or in some other way, while to offend against you is when the offence is committed against anything that is yours; for any man who offends your wife or your son or your friend or even your slave offends against you. You can take this to be true except in the case of inanimate objects; for we talk of offending against inanimate things, as for example "against the proverb," to quote Plato's phrase in the Banquet.³

SOPHIST

I appreciate the difference.

¹ Lucian insists that ὀβριζέω τινά refers to physical affront to the individual's person and ὀβριζέω εἰς τινα is used of affront to his possessions; the distinction is seldom observed in Attic or elsewhere or by Lucian himself.

How could "to change" be the same as "to exchange" ? One changes¹ one thing to another, for example the incorrect² to the correct, while one exchanges the true for the false.

I have learnt³ "to exchange" is to use figurative instead of plain language, while "to change" is sometimes to use plain and sometimes figurative language.

"change") is a grammatical term for the substitution of one mood, tense, etc., for another. More logically Lucian would have said "the correct to the incorrect . . . the true for the false."

² τὸ ὀρθόν 'correct' is also ambiguous, as it could also mean active as opposed to passive, or nominative as opposed to an oblique case.

³ The sophist shows that he has indeed learnt the meaning of hypallage, but does not know the technical sense of enallage.

Again to show zeal to ¹ another indicates that one is seeking one's private advantage, whereas to show zeal for someone means that one is seeking that person's advantage. How ever could it be different?

² Cf. Lexiphanes 25 and Phrynichus 236 where the non-Attic καθεσθῆις is condemned as barbaric. Lucian has περικαθεσθέντες in True Story 1.23.

LUCIUS or THE ASS

The most helpful accounts of the problem of the authorship of The Ass and its relationship with the Metamorphoses of Apuleius and the lost Μεταμορφώσεις thought by Photius to have been written by Lucius of Patras, are to be found in B. E. Perry's The Metamorphoses ascribed to Lucius of Patrae and in P. Vallette's introduction to the Budé edition of Apuleius' Metamorphoses.

The evidence of Photius (Bibl. Cod. 129, Migne) is as follows :

"I have read the Metamorphoses of Lucius of Patras, a work in several books. His style is clear, pure and attractive. Though he avoids innovations of language, he is inordinately fond of marvellous stories, and one might almost call him another Lucian. At any rate Lucius' first two books have more or less been copied by him from the work of Lucian entitled Lucius or The Ass ; or Lucian has copied his work from the books of Lucius. The second alternative appears the more probable, if I may indulge in conjecture ; for which was the earlier we cannot as yet tell. For Lucian has, as it were, filed down Lucius' books with their greater bulk, has removed what he did not think suitable for his own particular purpose and, using the original phrases and constructions, has assembled what remains in one book, calling what he has plundered from that source Lucius or The Ass. The work of both authors is full of fictitious stories and shameful obscenities. Lucian, however, in composing this book as in his other works, mocked and ridiculed the superstitions of the Greeks; Lucius on the other hand was serious and believed in the metamorphoses of men into other men and of beasts into men and back again, and in all the other ridiculous nonsense of the old fables, so that he wove all that into the fabric of his tale."

It is generally agreed that both The Ass and Apuleius' Metamorphoses are derived from the lost work for the following reasons:

(1) The narratives of The Ass and of Apuleius not only are the same in outline, but have numerous verbal parallels. (Apuleius' version differs in being fuller, digressing to tell many other tales, and by introducing autobiographical elements and favourable references to Isis and Osiris into his final chapters.)

(2) Apuleius tells us (1.1) "Fabulam Graecanicam incipimus." (Attempts to show that this earlier Greek version was also by Apuleius have proved unconvincing.)

(3) Apuleius' version cannot be an enlargement of The Ass because comparison of The Ass 24, 36 and 38 (see notes) with the parallel passages in Apuleius show that The Ass must be an abridged version, and therefore taken from the same "fabula Graecanica" as Apuleius.

The question of the additional stories found in Apuleius is a difficult one. A few scholars allow him no originality at all except perhaps in the ending of his work, though a rather more popular view is that all the additional material came from Apuleius.

LUCIUS OR THE ASS

Perhaps the best solution is given by A. Lesky (Hermes, 1941, pp. 43 ff.) who suggests that some few of the extra tales were in the lost original.

So much of the Greek of The Ass seems unworthy of Lucian that most editors have rejected it as non-Lucianic. Knaut and Neukamm, however, have amassed a formidable list of peculiarly Lucianic usages in The Ass. Rohde explained the combination of Lucianic and non-Lucianic elements by suggesting that Lucius of Patras wrote seriously about the transformation of someone else into an ass, and that Lucian abridged and parodied this work, changing it only at the end by making the Ass-man announce that he is Lucian's adversary, Lucius of Patras. This ingenious theory is to be discounted because (despite what Photius says) the lost original was probably not serious (both copies show facetious touches throughout), and a Lucianic parody would surely have been full of malicious sabotage right from the beginning.

The most convincing explanation is that of Perry, who developed Pauly's suggestion that the original Metamorphoses was written by Lucian himself, while the epitome was made by another. If the Metamorphoses was a facetious satire on credulity and curiosity, what more probable author for it than Lucian, the writer of the Lover of Lies, True Story and the Syrian Goddess, particularly in view of what Photius says of the style of the Metamorphoses? This theory is chronologically possible, especially if the Metamorphoses of Apuleius is regarded as later than his Apologia. The main objection is that it conflicts with part of the evidence of Photius, but this can be discounted because the lost work was probably not credulous and serious, nor was its author Lucius of Patras, as no self-respecting author would confess that he had been an ass for a period ("ass" had much the same proverbial connotation to the Greeks as to us). Photius, indeed, could well have made a mistake in assuming that the Ass-man's name given in c. 55 was also the name of the author or that the title meant "Metamorphoses written by" (rather than "experienced by") Lucius of Patras.

Many modern authorities, however, believe that Photius chose the right alternative and that Lucius of Patras was a writer and earlier than Lucian, though they disagree as to his date. If they are correct, The Ass should probably be regarded as the work of a Pseudo-Lucian, not because its Greek is unworthy of Lucian himself (Lucian could conceivably be imitating the vulgar Greek of the original or of the genre), but because one can scarcely visualise Lucian as a mere epitomist, or as showing such restraint when parodying, or indeed as a plagiarist (though it could be argued that his disavowal of plagiarism in Prometheus In Words refers particularly to his dialogues). However, the writer of The Ass often shows an incredibly Lucianic turn of phrase. One could therefore regard him as an imitator of incomparable genius; but an altogether more probable alternative is that Lucian's own hand had some share in the composition of The Ass, and that the theory that Lucius of Patras was the writer should be dismissed.

The story of the Ass-Man and his lady lover, however, existed before Lucian's time. It was known to

LUCIUS OR THE ASS

Juvenal (Satires, 6.334), and Cataudella (La Novella Greca, pp. 152 ff.) speculates that it may have figured among the earliest Milesian Fables (cf. note on c. 51). We should therefore, while accepting Perry's theory, assume that Lucian's Metamorphoses was not completely original, but contained a certain amount of adaptation of earlier material to which he gave unity and greater literary form. His debt, however, to predecessors such as Aristides or Lucius of Patras (if he existed) was probably no greater than his debt to Menippus in the field of satirical dialogue.

And so I was proceeding along my intended route; now it happened that I had as fellow travellers men on their way back home to Hypata, a city of Thessaly. We shared salt¹ and thus we proceeded on that difficult journey until we were near the city, when I asked the Thessalians if they knew a man living in Hypata, called Hipparchus. I had a letter of introduction to him from home, so that I could stay at his house. They said they knew this Hipparchus and where he lived in the city; they told me that he had plenty of money, but that the only women he kept were one servant and his wife, as he was a terrible miser. When we had come near to the city, we found a garden, and in it a tolerably comfortable cottage, where Hipparchus lived.

Eventually she came out and invited us in. I went in, greeted him and gave him the letter. He was just beginning dinner and was lying on a narrow couch, while his wife sat nearby, and by their side was an empty table. After reading the letter he said, "Indeed Decrianus is my dearest friend and the best man in all Greece, and I'm glad that he sends his own friends to my house with such confidence.¹ But you can see, Lucius, how tiny my cottage is. Nevertheless it is glad to offer its hospitality, and you will make it into a mansion if you live in it in a tolerant spirit." bath we returned and went straight into the dining-room where Hipparchus greeted me and invited me to recline beside him. The meal was by no means a frugal one,¹ and the wine was sweet and old. After we had eaten, we drank and talked as men do when a stranger comes to dinner ; and, after thus devoting the evening to drinking, we went to bed. On the next day Hipparchus asked me where I would now be going and if I would be spending all my time with him. " I shall be going on to Larissa," I answered, " but I think I shall stay here for three or four days."

4. But this was a pretence. In fact I wanted very much to stay there and find one of the women accomplished in sorcery² and see something strange, be it a man flying or turning into stone. Engrossed in my desire for such a sight, I walked round the city. I didn't know how to start my search, but walked around nevertheless. While doing so, I saw approaching me a woman who was still young and, to judge from seeing her in the street, was well off ; for she was gaily dressed, accompanied by many slaves and wearing too much gold. When I came closer, she greeted me and I answered her in like fashion.³ She then said, " I am Abroea, if you know any friend of your mother of that name ; and I love you sons of hers like my own sons. Why then won't you stay with me, my child ? "

" I'm most grateful to you," I said, " but I'm ashamed to leave a friend's house when I have no fault to find with him. However, I stay with you in spirit, my charming friend."

"Where have you gone to stay?"

"With Hipparchus."

"The miser?"

"You mustn't say that, mother; for he's been a splendidly generous host to me, so much so that he might even be accused of being too lavish."

She smiled, took my hand and led me aside, saying, "I would have you be on your guard against Hipparchus' wife in every way you can. For she's a clever witch and a fast woman who makes eyes at every young man. Any who won't listen to her she punishes with her magic; she has transformed many into beasts, while others she has done away with altogether. You, my child, are young and handsome enough to please a woman at first sight, and, being a stranger, you are something of no account."

5. When I learned that what I had been looking for was in the house with me, I had no further interest in her. When eventually I got away from her, I made my way to the house, saying to myself as I went, "Come now, you who claim to be eager for these strange sights, bestir yourself,¹ I say, and devise a cunning scheme whereby to gain what you desire. Strip yourself at once to wrestle with the maid, Palaestra,² for you must keep your distance from the wife of your host and friend. If you try a roll with her, and test your strength and grapple with her, you can be sure that you'll easily discover what you want to know. For slaves know all that goes on, whether good or bad."

Talking thus to myself, I entered the house. I found neither Hipparchus nor his wife at home, but Palaestra was busy at the fireplace preparing our dinner. 6. I immediately 'did make my start from thence'¹ and said, "Palaestra, you lovely creature, how rhythmically you turn and tilt your buttocks in time with the saucepan! And my word, how nimble too is the motion of your waist. Happy the man who dips his piece in such a dish!"

She, being a most lively and attractive little wench, said, "You'd run away, young fellow, if you had any sense and any desire to go on living, for it's all full of fire and steam here. If you so much as touch it, you'll have a nasty burn, and won't be able to budge from here. No one will be able to cure you, no, not even the Healer God himself, but only I who gave you the burn. What's strangest of all is that I shall make you long for more, and you'll always submit to being treated with my painful cure and, even though you're pelted with stones, you'll never try to escape its sweet pain. Why do you laugh? You see before you a veritable man-cooker. For its not merely these common foods that I prepare, but now I know about that great and glorious dish, man. I can kill a man, skin him, and cut him up, and I take particular pleasure in getting my hands right on his inside and his heart."

"What you say is quite true," I replied, "for even when I was still a long way off, you didn't just

At this she gave a loud and delightful laugh, and thereafter she was mine. We agreed that, once she had seen her master and mistress to bed, she was to come to my room and spend the night there. 7. When Hipparchus eventually arrived, we washed¹ and had dinner, drinking a great deal as we talked. Then I pretended I was sleepy, got up and did in fact go off to my room. Everything inside the room had been beautifully prepared. Bedding had been made up for my servant outside, while beside my bed was a table with a cup. There was wine there, and hot and cold water had been left ready ; this was all the work of Palaestra. Over the bedclothes roses had been strewn in profusion, some of them in their natural state, some plucked apart, and others plaited into garlands. Finding the room prepared for the celebrations, I awaited my companion. 8. Once she had seen her mistress to bed, she hurried to my room, and we made merry as we offered each other toasts and kisses. When we had fortified ourselves with wine for the night ahead, Palaestra said to me, " Young fellow, you must remember that it's Palaestra² with whom you've come to grips, and you must now show whether you've become a lad of mettle and have learnt many a wrestling hold."

"Indeed you won't see me shirking this trial of strength. Strip then, and let's start our wrestling now."

"You must follow my wishes as you demonstrate your prowess. I shall be like a trainer and supervisor, thinking up and calling out the names of the holds I wish, and you must be ready to obey and carry out all your orders."

"Well give your orders," said I, "and see how readily, how nimbly and how vigorously I shall display my holds."

9. She stripped off her clothing and, standing completely naked, began her instructions there and then. "Strip off, my lad; rub on some of that ointment from over there, and grapple with your adversary. Grab me by both thighs and put me on my back. Next get on top of me, slip in through my thighs and open me up, keeping your legs poised above me and stretched out. Then drop them into position, keeping glued to your target. Go right into the assault, and push forward everywhere now with a sharp attack till your opponent is worn out,¹ and let your weapon show its strength. Then withdraw, attack on a broad front and stab your foe through the groin. Push forward again to the wall and then strike. When you notice that the resistance is weakening, that's the very time to lock yourself in close combat and grip your opponent by the waist. Try not to hurry, but be patient for a little and match your pace to mine. Now you can fall out from class."

10. When I for my part had obeyed every order with ease and our wrestling had come to an end, I said to Palaestra with a laugh, " You can see, teacher, how readily and obediently I have done my wrestling, but take care that you aren't getting out of order in suggesting holds. For you ask for one after another."

But she slapped my face and said, " What a chatter-box I have for my pupil ! Take care that you don't get some more slaps for using different holds from the ones I ask for."

So saying, she rose from the bed, and, after freshening up, said " Now you will show whether you're a youthful and vigorous wrestler, and can wrestle and go into action on your knees."

Then she dropped on to one knee on the bed and said " Come now, Sir Wrestler, here you have the centre of operations. Brandish your weapon, push forward for a sharp thrust and plunge it in deep. You see it lying unfolded there ; make the most of it. First, of course, you must go into a clinch with me, and then you must bend me back, attacking and gripping me tight, allowing no gap between us. If you start slacking off, you must be faster in mounting each offensive and must move to a higher point of vantage. You must put your head down and strike, and see that you don't retire quicker than you're told to ; you must arch your battleline into a wide curve, before making a gradual withdrawal. Then you must push down again in a controlled infiltration and keep on the move. Only then may you withdraw your spearhead from the field. For it's now limp and lifeless, and your opponent is drenched."

I was now laughing heartily and said, "I wish to prescribe a few holds of my own, teacher, and you must get up and obey me. Now sit down. Next give me water to wash my hands, apply the rest of the ointment and wipe yourself clean. And now, by Heracles, hold me tight and lull me to sleep."

11. Such were our pleasant, frolicsome wrestling-bouts as we competed in nightly combat and covered ourselves with laurels. We found great enjoyment in this, so that I had completely forgotten about my journey to Larissa. Then at last I thought of gaining the information which had been the purpose of my athletic feats, and said to her, "Dearest, show me your mistress practising magic or changing her shape. For I've long had a craving for this strange sight. Or better still, if you can, work your own magic, so that you appear to me in one shape after another, for I imagine that you too are skilled in this art. This is no second-hand information but what I have learnt from my own soul, seeing that I who have long been called the adamant one by the women and have never cast these eyes of mine amorously on any woman, have been caught by you, and by your art you hold me prisoner, for you enchant my soul by the warfare of love."

But Palaestra said, "Stop joking. What magic incantations can conjure Love forth? He is the master of the art. I, my darling, know nothing about these things, I swear it by your own dear self and by this bed that's brought such joy. For I cannot even read, and my mistress is very jealous about her own art. But if the occasion permits, I shall try to let you see my mistress changing her shape."

Then, this being agreed, we went to sleep. 12. A few days later Palaestra reported to me that her mistress was going to turn into a bird and fly to her beloved.

"Now's your chance, Palestra," said I, "to do me the favour by which you can, and I pray you will, bring me relief from a craving that has persisted so long."

"Don't worry," she said.

When it was evening, she took me and led me to the door of the bedroom of her master and mistress, bidding me put my eye to a tiny crack in the door and see what was going on inside. I saw the lady of the house undressing. Then she went up to the lamp naked, took two grains of frankincense which she put upon the flame of the lamp, and standing there uttered a screed of words over the lamp. Then she opened a large box containing a great number of caskets, one of which she picked up and took out. What it had in it I don't know, though from its appearance I thought it was olive oil. She took some of this and, starting with her toenails, anointed herself all over. Suddenly she started sprouting feathers, and her nose became horny and hooked; she had all the attributes and marks of a bird, and was for all the world a night-raven.¹ When she saw that she had grown feathers, she uttered a terrible croak just as those birds do, rose up and flew away through the window. 13. I thought I was dreaming and felt my eyelids with my fingers, for I did not believe that my own eyes were seeing this or were awake. When eventually I had barely convinced myself that I was awake, I then asked Palaestra to give me feathers too, and to smear me with that concoction and allow me to fly ; for I wished to learn by experience whether, when my body was transformed from human shape, my soul would also become that of a bird. She stealthily opened the door of the room and brought me the casket. I now hastily stripped and smeared myself all over ; but alas I did not become a bird. Instead a tail sprang out from my behind, and all my fingers and toes vanished I know not where. I kept four nails in all and these were unmistakably hooves, while my hands and feet had become the feet of a beast, my ears had grown long and my face become enormous. When I looked myself over, I could see that I was an ass, but I no longer had a human voice with which to abuse Palaestra. But I did drop my lip and, confronting her with my appearance, looked up angrily at her as an ass does, trying as best I could to reproach her for my having become an ass instead of a bird. 14. She beat her face with both hands and said : " Unlucky one that I am, I have wrought great harm, for in my haste, misled by the similarity of the caskets, I took the wrong one, and not the one which produces feathers. But please do cheer up, my darling ; the cure for this is quite simple. For all you have to do is eat roses and you'll immediately discard your bestial shape, and restore my own lover to me once more. But I beg you, dearest one, remain the ass for this single night, and at dawn I shall make all speed to bring you roses, which you will eat and be cured," and she stroked my ears and my skin as she spoke.

15. But though I was an ass in every other respect, in mind and intellect I remained a human, and was still the same Lucius except for my voice. And so I cursed Palaestra bitterly to myself for her mistake, and went away biting my lip to where I knew my own horse was standing along with a real ass belonging to Hipparchus. When they saw me coming in, they were afraid I was coming to share their fodder, and dropped their ears and were prepared to defend their bellies with their feet. When I understood what was happening I retired to some distance from the manger and stood laughing, though my laughter took the form of braying. "Oh, what untimely curiosity!" I thought to myself. "What would happen if a wolf or any other wild beast were to get in? I'm in danger, though I've done nothing wrong." Such were my thoughts, for I didn't know, poor creature, the evils in store for me.

16. When it was now dead of night and silence and sweet sleep reigned, a noise started on the outside of the wall as if of someone breaking in. This was indeed so, and presently there was a hole big enough to take a man. Immediately one man came through, and others followed in the same way, till many were inside, all of them armed with swords. Then they went inside, bound Hipparchus, Palaestra and my servant in their rooms, and proceeded nonchalantly to empty the house, carrying out all the money, clothes and furnishings. When nothing else was left inside, taking the other ass and the horse, they saddled us and fastened on our backs everything they had brought out. We carried these heavy loads and they beat us with sticks, driving us on in their efforts to escape up the mountain by an unused track. How the other two animals felt I can't say, but for myself I was at death's door, for I was unshod and unaccustomed to such travelling and to walking over jagged stones with all that baggage to carry. I often stumbled, but wasn't allowed to drop down, as someone would immediately strike my rump with a stick. I often wanted to shout "Oh Lord!"; but only mustered a bray, and, though I could shout the "Oh" loud and clear, the "Lord" wouldn't follow. But I was beaten for this too, as I was giving them away by my braying. So I realised that my cries were useless and learned to proceed in silence and earn myself immunity from blows.

17. It was already day by now and we had climbed up many mountains. Our mouths were kept muzzled so that we couldn't graze and waste travelling time on breakfast. Thus for that day, too, I remained an ass. It was actually midday before we stopped at a farmhouse which, to judge from what was going on, belonged to friends of theirs. For they greeted each other with embraces and the occupants of the farm invited them to break their journey, serving them with breakfast and throwing down some barley for us animals; my fellows settled to their breakfast, but I, though miserably hungry, looked round for something to eat, for I'd never yet had a meal of raw barley. I noticed a garden over there behind the yard. It was full of magnificent vegetables, and above them I could see roses. Unnoticed by any in the house, for they were busy with breakfast, I went into the garden, partly to eat my fill of raw vegetables, but also to get the roses in the mistaken belief that, if I ate these flowers, I would become a man again. Then I stepped into the garden and ate my fill of lettuces, radishes and celery, the vegetables that a man can eat raw, but these roses were not proper roses, but grew on the wild laurel. They are called rose-bays¹ and make a bad breakfast for any ass or horse, for they say that to eat them is instant death. 18. Meanwhile the gardener had heard the noise and seized a stick. When he had gone into the garden and seen his enemy and the havoc wrought amongst his vegetables, he became just like a severe nabob who's caught a thief, and gave me a drubbing with his stick. He spared neither my ribs nor my haunches, and what's more hammered my ears and pounded my face. When I could put up with no more, I kicked out at him with both hind-legs, sending him on to his back among the vegetables, while I ran off up the mountain. When he saw me running away, he shouted for the dogs to be unleashed on me. There were lots of them, large creatures capable of tackling bears. I realised that they would seize me and tear me to pieces, and, after running to and fro for a short time, I decided in the words of the proverb "to run back home rather than run to harm."¹ So I went back again into the farmyard. They called off the dogs who were now rushing at me and tied them up, but beat me without stopping until the pain had made me excrete² all the vegetables from my bottom.

19. But when it was time for them to be on their way, they loaded me with the heaviest items and indeed the major part of their loot, and thus we started off from there. When presently I was faint from the blows and the weight of my load and my hooves were worn out by the journey, I decided to drop down where I was and never to get up again even if they beat me to death. I hoped that this plan would be of great benefit to me, for I thought that they would succumb to complete defeat and share my baggage between the horse and the mule and leave me lying there for the wolves to find. But a malignant deity realised my plans and turned them topsy-turvy. For the other ass, perhaps with the same intentions as I had, dropped down in the road. At first they beat the poor creature with a stick and told it to get up, but, when it paid no heed to their blows, some of them seized it by the ears and others by the tail and tried to get it on its feet. Since this was of no avail and it lay unconscious on the road just like a stone, they decided among themselves that their efforts were in vain and they were wasting on a dead ass time better spent on escape. They therefore divided his whole load between the horse and me. As for the unfortunate companion of my captivity and my pack-duty, they took him, hacked off his legs with their swords, and pushed him still quivering with life over a cliff, and down he went in a dance of death.

20. Since I could see from the fate of my travelling companion how my schemes would end, I decided to bear my present situation like an aristocrat and continue cheerfully on my way, for I hoped that eventually I would be sure to find my roses and be safely restored to my own shape; besides I heard the robbers saying that there was only a small part of the journey left and they would remain at that night's resting-place. We therefore carried all this load at a fast pace and reached their headquarters before evening. Inside sat an old woman and a fire was blazing merrily. The men stored away inside everything which we had been carrying, and then asked the woman why she was sitting idle like that instead of getting supper ready.

"Everything is ready for you," replied the old woman. "There's plenty of bread along with jars of old wine and I've also cooked you venison." After praising her efforts, they stripped, oiled themselves before the fire and helped themselves from a cauldron containing hot water. This they poured over their bodies, giving themselves improvised baths.

21. Shortly afterwards a large band of youths arrived carrying innumerable vessels of gold and silver along with clothes and a great quantity of finery for both men and women. They were all in partnership with each other and, after depositing their loot inside, they too washed in the same way. After this there followed a heavy meal and much conversation among the cut-throats as they drank, while the horse and I were given barley by the old woman. The horse gulped it down eagerly through a natural fear of me, his supper companion. I, however, would eat bread from the house, whenever I saw the old woman go out. The next day they left one youth for the old woman, and the rest of them went off out to work. I then bewailed my lot for the strict watch kept on me; for I was able to take the old woman lightly and to escape her notice, but the youth was tall, had a formidable look, always carried a sword and always closed the door.

22. Three days later about midnight the robbers returned without gold or silver or in fact anything except a young girl of great beauty who was weeping and had her clothes and her hair torn to shreds. They deposited her inside on the straw, telling her not to be afraid and bidding the old woman remain permanently indoors and keep a watch on the girl. She wouldn't eat or drink at all, but only kept weeping and tearing her hair. In consequence I also wept in sympathy with the beautiful girl as I stood beside the manger. Meanwhile the robbers were having their dinner outside in the vestibule. Towards daybreak one of the sentries posted to watch the roads entered with the news that a stranger was about to pass that way bearing great riches. They got up just as they were, armed themselves, saddled the horse and me and got us moving. But since I, poor wretch, knew that I was being driven out to battle and war, I proceeded with reluctance, so that in their eager haste they kept beating me with sticks. When we reached the road along which the stranger would be riding, the robbers fell upon the caravan, killing the master and his servants. They removed the articles of greatest value and loaded them on to the horse and me, but the rest of the goods they hid there in the wood. Then they started to drive us back, but because of our haste and all the cudgelling I dashed my foot against a sharp stone and incurred a painful injury. This left me lame for the rest of the journey, and they kept saying to each other, "Why do we choose to keep this ass in food, when he's always falling down? Let's throw him over the cliff, for he brings bad luck." "Yes," said another, "let's throw him over to atone for the sins of our band." They were preparing to attack me, but, on hearing these words, I moved forward for the rest of the journey as though my injury belonged to another, fear of death having made me impervious to pain. 23. When we reached our billet for the night, they took the baggage off our backs and stored it away carefully; then the men sat down to their own dinner. After nightfall, they came out to recover the rest of their baggage, and one of them said, "Why do we take this wretched ass with us, when his hoof makes him useless? We can carry some of the goods ourselves, and the horse will take the rest."

LUCIUS OR THE ASS

They went away, leading the horse with them. It was a particularly bright night because of the moonlight and I then said to myself, "Poor wretch, why do you stay here? The vultures and their young will have you for dinner. Don't you hear what plans they have made for you? Do you want to go over the cliff? It's night now, there's a good moon and they've gone off elsewhere. Run away and escape from these murderous masters."

As these thoughts ran through my mind, I noticed that I wasn't tied to anything, but the strap which had pulled me along was hanging by my side. This further circumstance gave me the strongest possible encouragement to escape, and I ran off at full speed. But the old woman, seeing that I was ready to run away, grabbed me by the tail and held on to me. I told myself that I deserved the cliff and other deaths as well, if I were captured by an old woman, and dragged her along. She raised a loud cry to the captive girl inside. She came forth and, on seeing this aged Dirce¹ hanging to an ass, showed the courage for a feat of heroism worthy of a foolhardy youth. She jumped on me, seated herself on my back and rode me off. Driven on by my longing to escape and the girl's eagerness I galloped off as fast as a horse, and the old woman was left behind. The girl prayed to the gods to let her escape to safety, while to me she said, "If you take me to my father, my beauty, I'll set you free from all work, and you'll have a bushel of barley every day for breakfast."

¹ Dirce was tied to a bull by Amphion and Zethus who allowed it to drag her about till she died. Cf. Apuleius, 6.27.

LUCIUS OR THE ASS

Because I for my part wished to escape from my murderers and hoped for plenty of help and care from the girl I'd rescued, I ran on heedless of my injury. 24. When we came to a place where three¹ roads met, we were overtaken by our enemies on their way back. In the moonlight they immediately recognised their unfortunate prisoners, from a long way off; they ran up, caught hold of me and said, "What conduct for a well-bred young lady! Where are you going so late at night, you hussy? Don't you even fear the spirits? Come here to us and we'll return you to your family." Thus they spoke with cruel laughter, turned me round and dragged me after them. I now remembered about my injured feet and started to limp. "So you're lame," they said, "now that you've been caught running away? Yet, when you were bent on escaping, you were in perfect fettle, going faster than a horse and flying like a bird." These words were accompanied by the stick and by this time I had a sore on my thigh from their admonitions. When we got back to the house, we found the old woman hanging on a rope over the rock. For fearing, as well she might, her masters' wrath over the escape of the girl, she had fastened the rope tight about her neck and hanged herself. They applauded the old woman for her good sense and cut her down, letting her fall over the cliff with the rope still round her neck; the girl, however, they tied up indoors. Then they had their dinner and indulged in a long session of drinking.

¹ This pointless mention of the three roads is an indication that this work is an abridgement of another version. In Apuleius 6.29 they are caught because they have stopped and are arguing about what road to take.

25. Meanwhile their conversation turned to the girl. "What are we to do with Miss Runaway?" asked one. "What else," said another, "but to throw her down to join the old woman over there, since she did her best to rob us of a lot of money and to betray our whole gang? For you may be sure, my friends, that, if she had reached her home, none of us would have been left alive; our enemies would have made a concerted attack on us and we should all have been captured. So let's have revenge upon our enemy. But she mustn't be thrown down on to the rocks; that's too easy a death. Rather let's devise her the most painful and protracted death, and one to keep her lingering in agony before it kills her."

Then they discussed how to kill her, and one of them said, "I know that you'll approve of my masterpiece of invention. We must kill the ass, for it's lazy and now even pretends to be lame, and besides it aided and abetted the escape of the girl. So let's slit its throat at dawn and cut its belly open; let's tear out all its guts and house this fine young lady inside the beast with her head sticking out, so that she doesn't suffocate immediately, but with all the rest of her body hidden inside, so that, when she's in there, we can sew them firmly together and throw them both out to feed the vultures. I'll guarantee they've never tasted that recipe before! Just think, my friends, what a terrible torture it will be. First to be housed with a dead ass, then to be broiled inside the beast by the scorching summer sun and gradually to starve to death without even being able to suffocate herself! The other things she'll suffer as the ass rots and she is afflicted by the smell and the maggots I won't mention, but in the end the vultures will penetrate through the ass and tear her to pieces just like it, perhaps even when she's still alive."

26. All shouted hearty approval of this monstrous idea, but I lamented my fate, since I should be killed and not even my carcass left unmolested but it would contain the luckless girl and would be the grave of that innocent maiden.

But at first light next morning a great number of soldiers suddenly arrived to attack these blackguards. They immediately tied them all up and took them off to the governor of the land. The girl's fiancé had come with the soldiers, for he was actually the one who had shown them where the robbers lived. So he took the girl, put her on my back and brought her home in this way. When the villagers saw us still a long way off, they realised all was well with us, as I had brayed out first intimation of the good news. They ran up, greeted us and took us indoors. 27. The girl showed me great consideration as was my due for sharing with her captivity, flight and the threat of that terrible joint death. I would have a bushel of barley from my mistress set before me for breakfast and enough hay to feed a camel. I then cursed Palaestra more than ever before—because she hadn't used her art to change me into a dog rather than an ass. For I saw the dogs sneaking into the kitchen and gobbling down the many titbits to be found at a wealthy wedding. A few days after the wedding, when my mistress mentioned her gratitude to me in the presence of her father, he too wished to reward me as I deserved and ordered me to be set free to graze in the open with the mares. "For," said he, "he'll live pleasantly as though he were free and will mount the mares." This indeed would have seemed the fairest reward, had the decision rested with an ass. So he called one of his grooms and gave me to him. I was delighted to think I'd have no more loads to carry. When we reached the field, the groom put me among the mares and took the herd of us into the pasture.

28. Then too was I doomed to fare just like Candaules;¹ for the groom left me at home for his wife Megapole,² and she would tie me to the mill, so that I ground her wheat and grains of barley. It would indeed have been no great hardship for a grateful ass thus to grind for his own masters, but that paragon of womanhood also hired out my unfortunate neck to her numerous neighbours, and asked them for meal as payment; and the barley meant for my breakfast she roasted and gave me to grind, and then made it into cakes which she would devour in one mouthful, while I had the husks for breakfast. Whenever the groom drove me out with the mares, I was battered and bitten by the stallions till I was half dead ; for they always suspected me of designs upon their own mares and would drive me away by kicking out at me with both hooves, so that I could not bear the jealousy of the horses. Thus I soon became thin and ugly, since I had no pleasure either indoors at the mill or when grazing outside, for then my companions waged war on me.

29. Furthermore I was often sent up to the mountain to fetch wood. This was the height of all my misfortunes. For first I had to climb a high mountain by a terribly steep path and in the second place the mountain was stony and I was unshod. They sent as driver with me a vile slave-boy, who every time found a fresh way of bringing me to death's door. In the first place he would beat me even when I was running fast, and not with an ordinary stick but with one bristling with sharp stubs, and always on the same part of my thigh, so that I had an open sore there from his switch. He always hit the same spot. Then he would pile on my back a load which an elephant could scarcely carry. The way down was steep, but even then he would beat me. Whenever he saw my load slipping and tilting to one side, though he ought to have transferred some of the wood to the place where my load was lighter and thus made it even, he never did so ; instead he would pick up boulders from the mountainside to add to the lighter and higher side of my load. And I, poor wretch, would descend with a load of useless boulders along with the wood. On our route was a perennial stream, which he would cross seated on my back behind the wood so as to save his shoes.

30. If ever I fell down through weariness and the weight of my load, that was the time when my suffering was intolerable ; for, when he ought to have given me a helping hand, and lifted me up from the ground and taken off some of my load, he would never so much as give me a hand, but from his seat aloft he would start from my head and ears and batter me with his stick till his blows made me rise. Furthermore there was another intolerable trick he would play on me. He would gather a load of the sharpest thorns, tie them up and hang them behind me from my tail. When I started on my way, as you might expect, they dashed against me as they hung, pricking and wounding my posterior regions. I could not defend myself against this, for the spikes always followed me and hung to me ; for if I went forward gingerly to guard against the onset of the thorns I was beaten to death by his sticks, while, if I avoided the sticks, then the sharp terror from behind assailed me. In short my driver made it his business to kill me.

31. One day, when I had many woes to suffer and could bear them no longer, I directed a kick at him. This kick he never forgot. Once he had instructions to transfer some flax from one place to another. So he took me, collected a great quantity of the flax and tied it on to my back ; he used a very uncomfortable rope to tie my load on very tight, so as to cook up great torment for me. Well, when we had to set out, he stole a stick while still hot from the fireside, and, when we had gone some distance from the farmhouse, plunged it into the flax. This, as was inevitable, at once started to burn and thereafter my load was one great fire. Perceiving that I would very soon be roasted, and coming upon a deep bog by the wayside, I hurled myself into the wettest part of it. Then I rolled the flax in the bog and twisted and turned till the mud had quenched my nasty scorching load. So in this way I was able to continue the rest of my journey in less danger; for the boy could no longer set light to me as the flax was mixed with wet mud. After his journey the impudent lad used this episode, too, to malign me, for he said that I had deliberately knocked against the hearth in passing. So that time I escaped from the flax though I little expected it.

32. But the foul lad devised another far worse trick to play me. He took me to the mountain and put on my back a bulky load of wood, which he sold to a neighbouring farmer, but brought me back home without any wood on my back, and falsely accused me before his master of a scandalous deed. "Master, I don't know why we keep this ass, for he's terribly lazy and slow. Furthermore he now has a new habit. Whenever he sees a pretty young woman or a boy, he kicks me away and runs in pursuit of them, like a man in love making advances to his lady; he bites them with his show of kissing and forces his love on them. Because of this he'll bring you to court and cause you trouble, for he insults everyone and knocks them down. Just now, when he was carrying wood, he saw a woman going off into a field ; he shook off all his wood and scattered it over the ground. The woman he knocked down on the road and tried to make love to her, till folk ran up from every side to protect her from being torn apart by this handsome lover."

33. When his master heard this he said, " Well, if he won't walk and won't carry and loves like a human with his frenzy for women and boys, kill him and give his entrails to the dogs, but keep his flesh for our working men ; and, if our owner asks how he died, put the blame on a wolf."

This delighted the vile lad who was my driver and he wanted to kill me at once. But it so happened that one of the neighbouring farmers was present, and he saved me from death by a terrible plan he had for me.

" You certainly mustn't kill an ass," he said, " that can grind corn and carry loads. It's quite easy ; you must take him and castrate him, seeing that he rushes after humans with his mad passion. For the moment he's rid of his romantic inclinations, he'll grow gentle and fat, and carry heavy loads without complaining. If you have no personal experience of this type of surgery, I'll come here in three or four days' time and use my knife to make him gentler than a lamb for you."

The whole household applauded his advice, but I was already in tears at the immediate prospect of losing the manhood in my ass's body, and thought I didn't wish to live any longer if I should become a eunuch. I therefore decided to starve myself to death from that moment or to throw myself from the mountain, where, though hurled to a most miserable death, I could lie dead with my body whole and un mutilated.

34. When it was now dead of night, a messenger came from the village to our farmhouse with news about the young bride who had been the prisoner of the robbers, and her bridegroom. He said that, while they had been walking on the shore late in the evening, the sea had suddenly risen and snatched them out of sight, and that their lives had thus ended in tragic death. Since the household had lost its young master and mistress, they decided no longer to remain in captivity, but ransacked the whole house and escaped with their loot. The keeper of the horses took me and seizing everything he could, tied it on to the mares, the other animals, and me. Though I was annoyed at having to carry the load of a real ass, I welcomed this reprieve from castration. All night long we followed a difficult route and after three further days' journey we reached Beroea, a large and populous city of Macedonia.

35. There our drivers decided to settle themselves and us, and we animals were then offered for sale by a stentorian auctioneer who stood shouting in the middle of the marketplace. Those who approached wanted to open and inspect our mouths, and looked at the teeth of each of us to see our ages. The others were bought by various people, but I alone was left and the auctioneer told them to take me back home,

² Atargatis. See vol. IV, pp. 337 ff., and Harmon's notes. Cf. Babrius 137 for a similar description of an ass in the employ of Galli.

³ Although Lucius is the last to be sold, the comment that 30 drachmas was a large price should be regarded as serious rather than ironic. In the parallel passage, Apuleius 8.24-25, Philebus, on hearing that the ass is a Cappadocian, eagerly pays 17 denarii, the full price asked.

saying, "This one alone, as you see, hasn't found a master." But Nemesis,¹ the goddess who ever twists and changes so much, brought me a master too, though not the sort I would have chosen. For he was an old catamite and one of those who take the Syrian goddess ² around the villages and countryside and compel the goddess to beg alms. To this man was I sold for the princely ³ sum of thirty drachmas, and with a heavy heart I now followed my new master.

36. When we came to the house of Philebus ⁴—for that was the name of my purchaser—he at once raised a loud shout in front of the doors, "Girlies, I've bought you a handsome sturdy slave of Cappadocian stock."⁵ Now these "girlies" were a bevy of catamites who plied the same trade as Philebus, and they all clapped their hands at his words, for they all thought that the purchase really was a man. When they saw that the slave was an ass, they all jeered at Philebus, saying, "That's no slave you have there but a bridegroom for yourself. Where did you get him? I hope this glorious match proves an asset ⁶ to you and you soon breed foals like the father."

Cf. c. 46 where Lucius is sold for 25 Attic drachmas (or 11 denarii in Apuleius). Presumably therefore the drachmas of this passage are more valuable than the Attic drachmas of c. 46.

⁴ Philebus = Love-youth (The Rev. Love-Boyes).

⁶ There may be a pun on δωος and δωαιο here as perhaps also in Dialogues of the Courtesans 14.4.

LUCIUS OR THE ASS

37. So saying, they laughed. But on the next day they mustered for work, as they themselves called it, dressed up the goddess and put her on my back. Then we rode out of that city and went round the country. Whenever we came to a village, I, the bearer of the goddess, would stand still, while the company of pipers would blow their frenzied tunes, and the others would throw off their turbans, drop their heads and twist them round on their necks; they would cut their forearms with their swords, and each would stick his tongue out from his teeth and cut it, so that within a moment everything was full of effeminate blood. When I saw this, at first I would stand there trembling with the fear that the goddess might also need asses' blood. Whenever they cut themselves thus, they would make a copper and silver collection among the spectators standing around. Others gave them dried figs, cheeses, jars of wine and bushels of wheat and barley for the ass. From these they supported themselves and looked after the goddess who rode on my back.

38. One day when we had invaded a village of that country, they hunted down a lusty young villager and brought him into the place where they were staying. Then they got from the villager the sort of treatment habitually popular with such foul catamites. This caused me inordinate distress at my changed shape and I wanted to cry out, "Cruel Jupiter, to think that my sufferings have come to this!" But it was not my voice but that of the ass which rose from my throat and I produced a loud bray. Now it happened that some of the villagers were looking for an ass which they had just lost.

Upon hearing my loud bray, assuming that I was their property, they came in without a word to anyone and surprised the catamites at their unmentionable practices inside. This occasioned much laughter amongst the intruders, who then ran out and spread reports of the priests' lewdness throughout the whole village. But they were terribly ashamed at the exposure of these practices of theirs and without delay left the place that night. When they had reached a lonely part of the road, they began to express their angry rage at me as the betrayer of their rites. This terrible abuse of theirs I could stand, but what followed was no longer tolerable ; for, after they had taken the goddess from my back and put her on the ground, they stripped off all my trappings, and tied me now naked to a large tree. Then they flogged me with that knuckle-bone ¹ whip of theirs till they had almost killed me, and told me thereafter to carry the goddess in silence. Moreover they had planned to kill me after my flogging, because I had brought such insults upon them and had had them driven from the village before they had finished their business, but I was saved from death by the goddess, for she made them feel terribly ashamed of leaving her sitting on the ground without means of travelling.

39. After my flogging, therefore, I took up the goddess and continued the journey. When it was now about evening, we stopped at a rich man's estate. He was at home, welcomed the goddess very gladly to his house, and brought her sacrifices. I was involved there to my certain knowledge in great personal danger. For a friend of the landowner had sent him a ham of wild ass as a gift. The cook had been given this to prepare, but had lost it through carelessness when a pack of dogs got in unnoticed. Fearing that he would be severely beaten and tortured for losing the ham, he had decided to hang himself, but his wife proved my evil genius. "Don't kill yourself, dearest" she said, "don't give in to such despair. For, if you listen to me, you'll settle all your troubles satisfactorily. Take the catamites' ass away to a deserted spot and then slit its throat and cut off that piece—it's the ham—and bring it here, cook it and serve it to your master, and throw the rest of the ass into some gully. It will be thought to have run away and disappeared. Can't you see how plump it is and superior in every way to that wild ass?"

The cook applauded his wife's plan saying, "This suggestion of yours is excellent, wife, and my only means of escaping a flogging. I shall carry it out right away."

Such, then, was the plan hatched with his wife by the villain as he stood beside me planning to be my cook. 40. But I, already foreseeing what was coming, decided my best plan was to escape from his knife. I broke the rope by which I was led, kicked up my heels and rushed inside where the catamites were dining with the landowner. When I ran in, I knocked over light, tables and all with my kicking heels. I thought I had thus found a clever way to safety, and that the landowner would immediately order me to be kept safely locked up as being a high-spirited ass. But this clever plan brought me into extreme danger. For they now thought me mad, brought out swords galore and spears and long sticks to attack me, and prepared to kill me. When I saw my great danger, I rushed into the room where my masters would be sleeping. When they saw this, they closed the doors of the room securely from the outside.

41. When it was now dawn, I took the goddess up again and left with the mountebanks. We reached another large and populous village, where they introduced a fresh monstrosity by insisting that the goddess should not stay in the house of a human but take up residence in the temple of the local goddess held in most honour amongst them. They were very glad to welcome the foreign goddess and gave her accommodation along with their own goddess, but assigned us to the house of some paupers. After they had spent many days there, my masters wished to leave for the nearby city and asked the goddess back from the local people. They entered the sacred precinct themselves, carried her out, put her on my back and rode off. Now when the impious fellows entered that precinct, they stole a golden bowl, a votive offering. This they carried off concealed in the person of the goddess. When the villagers discovered this, they gave immediate pursuit ; then, upon drawing near, they leapt down from their horses and laid hold of the fellows in the road, calling them impious and sacrilegious, and demanding the return of the stolen offering. They searched everywhere and found it in the bosom of the goddess. They therefore tied up the effeminate fellows, dragged them off and threw them into prison ; the goddess whom I had carried they took and gave to another temple, while the golden vessel they gave back to their local goddess.

42. The next day they decided to offer the prisoners' effects, myself included, for sale ; and I was bought by a foreigner who lived in the neighbouring village and was a baker by trade. He took men, loaded me with ten bushels of corn which he'd bought and drove me to his house along a difficult road. When we arrived, he took me to his millhouse, where I saw a great number of animals whose fellow slave I was to be ; there were many mills all being turned by the animals and everything was full of flour. For the time being they let me rest there, as I was a new slave and had had a very heavy load to carry and a difficult road to cover. The next day, however, they blindfolded me, harnessed me to the beam of the mill and started me off. Though I knew from long experience how to grind, I pretended not to know, but my hopes were disappointed. For many of the millers took sticks and stood around me and surprised me, for I couldn't see, by smacking me all together, so that I suddenly started to spin like a top from their blows. Thus I learnt by experience that a slave should do his duty without waiting for his master's hand.

43. Thus I became very thin and weak so that my master decided to sell me. I was bought from him by a nurseryman, who had a market garden to cultivate. Let me tell you about our work. At dawn my master would load me with vegetables and take them to market; when he had delivered them to the greengrocers, he would take me back to the nursery; then he would dig, plant and water while I stood idle. However life was terribly hard for me; in the first place it was now winter, and he could not afford bedding for himself, much less for me, and I had to tread unshod on damp clay or hard, sharp ice, while all that either of us had to eat was bitter, rough lettuces.

44. One day as we were going out to the nursery, we met a gentleman in military uniform who addressed us at first¹ in Latin and asked the nurseryman where he was taking me, the ass. He made no reply, because, I suppose, he didn't understand that language. The soldier, angry at an imagined insult, used his whip to strike the nurseryman who then grappled with him, tripped him up and sent him sprawling on the road. He then struck at him just as he lay, using his fists and his feet and a stone from the road. At first the soldier resisted and threatened to kill him with his sword, if ever he got to his feet again. As though warned by the soldier's own words, my master chose the safest course, drew the soldier's sword and threw it a long way off, before starting once again to pound his prostrate foe, who now saw that he could bear it no longer and pretended he had been killed by the blows. My master, terrified at this, left him lying there just as he was, but gave me the sword to carry and went off to the city.

45. When we got there, he gave his nursery to a colleague to work, while he himself, fearing the risk of returning by the road, got one of his friends in the town to hide the two of us. Next day they adopted the following plan; they hid my master in a chest, while they carried me by the feet up a ladder to a loft, in which they shut me up. The soldier had eventually struggled to his feet, as they told us, and, dizzy with his blows, had reached the city, where he met his messmates and told them of the desperate conduct of the nurseryman. They went with the soldier and discovered our hiding-place. They then fetched the magistrates of the city, who sent in one of their constables and ordered all the inmates to come out. When they emerged, there was no sign of the nurseryman. The soldiers therefore insisted that he was inside along with me, his ass. The inmates however maintained that nothing, whether man or ass, was still left in the house. As this was occasioning great noise and much shouting in the gateway, I, headstrong, inquisitive creature, wished to find out who the shouters were, and poked my head down through the window. The soldiers saw me and immediately raised a shout, and our friends were caught out in their lies. The magistrates went in, searched everywhere and found my master in the chest. They seized him and sent him off to prison to await trial for his bold conduct, while I was carried down by them and handed over to the soldiers. They all laughed uncontrollably at the one that had turned informer from the loft and betrayed his own master. Thus I originated the saying¹ thereafter common among men, "from the peeping of an ass."

46. What happened to my master I can't say, but the next day the soldier decided he would sell me, and I fetched twenty-five Attic drachmas.² My purchaser was the servant of a very wealthy man from Thessalonica, the largest city in Macedonia. This man's business was to cook the meat for his master and he also had as his fellowslave his brother, who was skilled in baking bread and making honeycakes. These brothers were always messmates, lodging in the same place and keeping the tools of their trades together. Thereafter they established me with them in their quarters. After their master's dinner they would both bring in many left-overs, one of them of meat and fish, the other of bread and cakes. They used to shut me up with all this and go off to have a bath, leaving a most pleasant charge in my protection. I would then say a hearty goodbye to the barley put out for me and devote myself to the proceeds of my masters' skill, and would gorge myself on human food once again after so long. When they came in, at first they didn't notice my gormandising at all, because there was so much food lying about and I still showed fear and restraint when stealing my lunch. But once I had decided they were completely unaware of all this, and had started to eat the finest portions and a great deal besides, and they to notice their losses, at first they would look suspiciously at each other, and one would call the other robber and a shameless thief of the common store; thereafter they both kept a careful check and the titbits would be counted.

47. But my life was one of pleasure and luxury, and normal food had made my body handsome again and my coat resplendent with a fine growth of hair. When these excellent fellows saw that I was big and fat, although my barley was not being used but remained at the same level, they began to suspect my daring deeds, and, pretending to go to their bath, they closed the door behind them, put their eyes to a chink in it and looked inside. Then, unsuspecting of their trick, I went and started my meal. At first they laughed to see this incredible meal in progress, but then they called their fellow-slaves to see me, and they all laughed so heartily that their master heard them because of the din outside his room. He asked one of them why those outside were laughing so heartily. When he heard the reason, he got up from the table, peeped inside and, on seeing me gulping down a portion of wild boar, came running in roaring with laughter. I was very upset at being exposed as a thief and glutton in the presence of my master. But he laughed heartily at me, and first ordered me to be brought into his dining-room, and then gave instructions for a table to be put before me with many of the things which no other ass could eat—meats, shell-fish, soups and fish, some soured in fish-sauce and olive oil, others covered in mustard. Since I now saw that fortune was smiling on me kindly, and realised that only this comic turn would save me, although I was already gorged, I stood beside the table and started to eat. The room rang with laughter and someone said, "This ass will drink wine too, if someone will dilute¹ it for him and serve it to him." The master ordered this to be done and I drank what was brought to me.

48. He, naturally enough, saw that I was a marvellous treasure and told one of his stewards to give my purchaser twice what he had paid for me. He handed me over to a young freedman of his personal staff and told him to instruct me in all things I could do to afford him the greatest entertainment. Everything was quite simple for him, as I immediately obeyed my instructor in every respect. First of all he made me lie on a couch on my elbow just like a human being, then wrestle with him, yes and dance standing upright on my two legs, nod "yes" or "no" when spoken to, and do all the things which I could have done even without being taught. All this became the talk of the town—an ass at his master's beck and call, an ass that drank wine, wrestled and danced. But my greatest claim to fame was that, when talked to, I would nod "yes" or "no" at the right time. Whenever I wanted a drink, I would give the wine-waiter a push and ask for it with my eyes. They were all amazed at this as something extraordinary, not knowing there was a man in the ass, but I used their ignorance to ensure my luxury. Moreover I learned to walk with my master on my back, and to run at a trot which was most comfortable and scarcely felt by my rider. I had expensive trappings and was caparisoned in purples; my bridle was ornamented with silver and gold, and I had hanging to me bells which tinkled out melodiously.

49. Our master, Meneclēs, had, as I said, come there from Thessalonica; he had done so because he had promised to give his native city a gladiatorial show. The gladiators were already in training for the fight and the time to set out had come. We left at dawn, and I carried my master whenever it was a rough part of the road and difficult for the carriages to cross. When we reached Thessalonica, the whole town rushed to enjoy the spectacle and to see me; for I had been preceded from afar by the fame of the many roles I played and my human skill in dancing and wrestling. However it was only to his most distinguished fellow-citizens that my master exhibited me over the wine, regaling his guests with these amazing comic acts of mine. 50. My keeper found a source of considerable income in me ; for he locked me in a room, and kept me standing there, and would exact a fee before opening the door to those who wished to see me and my marvellous feats. They would bring in various eatables and particularly the things thought offensive to the stomach of an ass. These I would eat, so that by sharing meals with my master and the folk of the city within a few days I had already become wonderfully big and fat.

One day a foreign lady of great wealth and considerable beauty came in to see me at a meal, and fell passionately in love with me, partly because she had seen I was a handsome ass, but also because my extraordinary accomplishments made her eager to have intercourse with me. She spoke to my keeper, promising him a substantial bribe if he would allow her to sleep the night with me. As he did not care whether she would get anything out of me or not, he accepted the bribe. 51. When it was now evening and our master had dismissed us from the dining-room, we returned to our sleeping quarters to find that the woman had long been ensconced in my bed. Soft pillows had been provided for her, bedding brought in and a bed was all ready for us on the floor. Then the lady's servants settled for the night somewhere near at hand outside the room, while inside she lit a large, bright lamp. Then she stripped, stood stark naked beside the lamp, poured out ointment from an alabaster vase and rubbed it on. Then she rubbed ointment from the vase over me as well, smearing it particularly thickly over my nose. Then she kissed me, spoke to me as if I was her beloved and a human, took me by the halter and dragged me on to the bed. I needed no invitation ; I was half-soused with much old wine, my skin was excited by the ointment, and I saw that she was a beautiful wench in every particular. I lay down, but was most uncertain how to mount the woman ; for ever since I had become an ass, I had had no intercourse even of the normal asinine kind, nor had I had anything to do with a female ass. Moreover I was beset by an inordinate fear that she would be too small for me and would be torn asunder, while I would have a fine penalty to pay as her murderer. I didn't know that I needn't have feared, for she encouraged me with many kisses and passionate ones at that, and when she saw that I could not hold myself back, she lay beside me as though I was a man, embraced me, lifted me in and received the full extent of my member.¹ I, poor coward, was still afraid, and was gently drawing myself away, but she clung to my member, so that it could not withdraw and followed it as it retreated. Once I was absolutely convinced that I needed to do something more to ensure her pleasure and enjoyment, I served her thereafter without fear, considering myself no worse than Pasiphaë's² lover. love and so insatiable for the pleasures of copulation that she devoted the whole night to me.

52. At daybreak she got up and left, arranging with my keeper to pay the same fee for the same privileges that night. As he wished to enrich himself from my attainments and at the same time to show his master a fresh trick of mine, he locked me up with her, and she overworked me terribly. One day my keeper went to my master to report on my feat, pretending he himself had taught me it, and, when it was now evening, unknown to me brought him to our bedroom, and through a chink in the door showed me bedded inside with the wench. Delighted with the spectacle, he conceived the desire of exhibiting me doing this in public and told him to keep it a secret, "so that," he said, "on the day of the show we may introduce him in the amphitheatre with a condemned woman, and he will mount her before the eyes of everyone." Then they brought in to me a woman condemned to be killed by the animals, and told her to make advances to me and fondle me.

53. Then finally when the day came for my master to show his munificence,¹ they decided to take me to the amphitheatre. When I entered, I found a huge couch made of Indian tortoise-shell and inlaid with gold. On this they made me lie and the woman lie on it by my side. Then they put us on a trolley, wheeled us into the arena and deposited us in the middle. The people raised a loud shout and all clapped their hands to applaud me; a table was placed at one side with many of the dainties which epicures have at dinner. Handsome wine-boys stood beside us, serving us wine in golden goblets. My keeper stood behind me and told me to eat. But I was not only ashamed to be reclining in the amphitheatre but also afraid that a bear or lion would leap on me.

54. Meanwhile a man passed carrying flowers, amongst which I noticed fresh rose-petals. No longer afraid I leapt to my feet and jumped off the couch. They all thought I was standing up to dance, but I went through the flowers one by one, picked out the roses and gulped them down. While they were still watching me in astonishment, that bestial appearance left me and vanished, the ass of old disappeared, and Lucius himself was standing naked on the spot¹ I occupied. All were amazed at this strange, unexpected spectacle and raised a terrible din. The audience were divided into two opinions. Some thought that I should be burnt to death immediately as a scoundrel versed in terrible spells and able to adopt many shapes; the others advocated waiting and learning what I had to say before deciding on the matter. I rushed up to the governor of the province,²

² Presumably Macedonia, as the games are held at Thessalonica (cf. c. 49) and Lucius in c. 55 says he comes from "Patras in Achaia." Here once again there is inadequate epitomising, as it is pointless to talk about a "Thessalian witch" in Thessalonica. In Apuleius X.18 seq. Thiasus (= Menecles) goes to Thessaly for horses and gladiators and then returns to his native Corinth to put on the games.

who was among the spectators, and told him from down there that a Thessalian witch, the slave of a Thessalian witch, had anointed me with a magic unguent and made me into an ass, and I begged him to arrest me and keep me in custody till I convinced him of the truth of my story.

55. The governor said: "Tell us your name and that of your parents and any relatives you claim to have, and that of your city."

I replied: "My father is . . .,¹ my name is Lucius, and that of my brother is Gaius, and the other two names we share with our father. I write histories² and other prose works, while he is an elegiac poet and a skilled prophet. Our native city is Patras in Achaia."

When the governor heard this, he said: "You are the son of folk most dear to me, friends who have welcomed me in their home and honoured me with gifts. I know you are absolutely truthful if you are their son." Then he leapt up from his seat, embraced me and kissed me many times and took me to his own home. Meanwhile, too, my brother had arrived with money and many other things for me, and the governor publicly declared that he was releasing me. We went down to the sea, looked for a ship and put our baggage aboard.

56. I then thought it best to visit the lady who had loved me when an ass, telling myself she would think me handsomer now I was in human form. She gladly welcomed me, because, I suppose, she was delighted at this extraordinary situation, and she begged me to dine and sleep with her. I agreed, for I thought I would deserve the jealousy of heaven if upon becoming human the ass who had received affection took excessive airs and scorned her who had loved him. I dined with her, anointed myself richly with sweet oil and garlanded myself with roses, the dear flowers which had restored me to human form. When the night was now advanced and it was time to go to bed, I got up and stripped as though conferring a great favour and stood naked before her, imagining that I would please her still more by the contrast I formed with the ass. But when she saw that every part of me was human, she spat at me and said, "Get to blazes away from me and my house; don't sleep anywhere near me."

When I asked what heinous offence I'd committed, she replied, "By heavens, I didn't love you but the ass in you and he was the one I slept with, not you. I thought that, if nothing else, you would still have kept trailing around with you that mighty symbol of the ass. But you have come to me transformed from that handsome, useful creature into a monkey.

She immediately called her servants and had me carried out of the house aloft on their backs. I was thrust out of the door and there I lay naked in my fine garlands and unguents, with only the bare earth to embrace. At crack of dawn I ran naked to the ship and told my brother of my ridiculous misadventure. Then we sailed away from that city on a favouring wind and within a few days I reached my native city. Then I sacrificed and dedicated offerings to the gods who had saved me, now that after so very long and with such difficulty I had escaped, not from the dog's bottom of the fable,¹ by Zeus, but from the curiosity of an ass.²

¹ The precise meaning of a "dog's bottom" is uncertain; the phrase is used in Aristophanes, Acharnians 863 and Ecclesiazousae 255. L. A. Post suggests a connection with the fable of the dog who would have relieved himself over a bunch of reeds if one of the reeds had not pricked his posterior. The dog moved off and barked at the reed. The reed said, "I'd rather you barked at me from a distance than dirtied me from close by." The moral is that fools and knaves should be kept at a distance. See No. 608 in B. E. Perry, Aesopica I, page 630, and in L. C. L. Babrius and Phaedrus, Appendix, p. 543.

² This may be an alternative form of the proverb found in c. 45.

AFFAIRS OF THE HEART

AFFAIRS OF THE HEART

Although there is an apparent reference to Affairs of the Heart in Essays in Portraiture, c. 4, it is obvious from the style of this dialogue that the author is not Lucian but an imitator. When it was written is uncertain, but the reference to the decaying conditions of the cities of Lycia in c. 7 perhaps suggests a date some time after the invasion of the Goths and of Sapor, i.e. not earlier than the last quarter of the third century A.D. On the other hand, Rhodes still seems to be prosperous, though we know that it suffered an earthquake in the middle of the fourth century A.D., and Justinian Codex 1.40.6 suggests that it had lost its prosperity by 385 A.D. The most probable date for the dialogue, therefore, is the early fourth century A.D.

Though I have adopted Harmon's attractive title "Affairs of the Heart", it is perhaps misleading and a more accurate rendering would be The Two Types of Love. For an account of the various facets of homosexual and heterosexual love among the Greeks see Love in Ancient Greece (translated by J. Cleugh from the French of R. Flacelière).

This dialogue had literary precedents in Plato's Symposium, Phaedrus and Lysis, and in Xenophon's Symposium, all of which discuss love in general, and in Plutarch's Dialogue on Love (Moralia, vol. ix, L.C. L.), part of which anticipates the particular theme of Affairs of the Heart with its argument, 750 ff., between Daphnaeus, the champion of conjugal love, and Protogenes, the advocate for pederasty. It is to be noted that, whereas in Plutarch conjugal love is declared the victor, Lycinus in c. 51 gives a tactfully worded verdict in favour of pederasty.

Achilles Tatius 2. 35-38 also has a debate on the comparative merits of love of women and love of boys with some similarities to this dialogue. As the very latest possible date for Achilles Tatius' novel is c. 300 A.D. and it may well be considerably earlier¹ than that, it seems probable on the whole that Affairs of the Heart is the later of the two works, and its author may have taken some of his ideas from Achilles Tatius.

The best study of this dialogue is by R. Bloch (Strasburg, 1907).

1. Theomnestus, my friend, since dawn your sportive talk about love has filled these ears of mine that were weary of unremitting attention to serious topics. As I was parched with thirst for relaxation of this sort, your delightful stream of merry stories was very welcome to me. For the human spirit is too weak to endure serious pursuits all the time, and ambitious toils long to gain some little respite from tiresome cares and to have freedom for the joys of life. This morning I have been quite gladdened by the sweet winning seductiveness of your wanton stories, so that I almost thought I was Aristides¹ being enchanted beyond measure by those Milesian Tales, and I swear by those Loves of yours that have found so broad a target that I am indeed sorry that you've come to the end of your stories. If you think this is but idle talk on my part, I beg you in the name of Aphrodite herself, if you've omitted mention of any of your love affairs with a lad or even with a girl, coax it forth with the aid of memory. Besides we are celebrating a festival today and sacrificing to Heracles. You know well enough, I'm sure, how impetuous that god was where love was concerned,

² Aphrodite vented her wrath on the children of the Sun because the Sun had told Hephaestus about her affair with Ares (cf. Dialogues of the Gods, 21, 7. 334 and Seneca, Hippolytus, 124 ff.). The scholiast takes "child of the sun" to refer specifically to Pasiphaë, but, as Posidon

2. You would find it quicker, my dear Lycinus, to count me the waves of the sea or the flakes of a snowstorm than to count my loves. For I for my part think that their quiver has been left completely empty and, if they choose to fly off in quest of one more victim, their weaponless right arms will be laughed to scorn. For, almost from the time when I left off being a boy and was accounted a young man, I have been beguiled by one passion after another. One Love has ever succeeded another, and almost before I've ended earlier ones later Loves begin. They are veritable Lernean heads appearing in greater multiplicity than on the self-regenerating Hydra,¹ and no Iolaüs can help against them. For one flame is not extinguished by another. There dwells in my eyes so nimble a gadfly that it pounces on any and every beauty as its prey and is never sated enough to stop. And I am always wondering why Aphrodite bears me this grudge. For I am no child of the Sun,² nor am I puffed up with the insolence of the Lemnian women³ or the boorish contempt of Hippolytus⁴ was usually regarded as the author of her misfortunes, the reference is perhaps more general and also includes Medea, Circe and Phaedra, daughter of Pasiphaë, all of whom were unhappy in love.

⁴ The death of Hippolytus, as related in Euripides' play, was due to his contempt for Aphrodite.

3. Stop this affected and unpleasant play-acting, Theomnestus. Are you really annoyed that Fortune has allotted you the life you have? Do you think it a hardship that you associate with women at their fairest and boys at the flower of their beauty? But perhaps you'll actually need to take purges for so unpleasant an ailment. For you do suffer shockingly, I must say. Why won't you get all this nonsense out of your system and think yourself fortunate that god has not given you for your lot squalid husbandry or the wanderings of a merchant or a soldier's life under arms? But your interests are in the oily wrestling-schools, in resplendent clothes that shed luxury right down to your feet and in seeing that that your hair is fashionably dressed. The very torment of your amorous yearnings delights you and you find sweetness in the bite of passion's tooth. For when you have tempted you hope, and when you have won your suit you take your pleasure, but get as much pleasure from future joys as from the present. Just now at any rate, when you were going through in Hesiodic¹ fashion the long catalogue of your loves from the beginning, the merry glances of your eyes grew meltingly liquid, and, giving your voice a delicate sweetness so that it matched that of the daughter of Lycambes,² you made it immediately plain from your very manner that you were in love

Accordingly, as my narratives have continued since dawn and lasted too long, let your Muse, departing from her customary seriousness, spend the day in merriment along with the god, and, as I can see you incline to neither type of passion, prove yourself, I beg, an impartial judge. Decide whether you consider those superior who love boys or those who delight in womankind. For I who have been smitten by both passions hang like an accurate balance with both scales in equipoise. But you, being unaffected by either, will choose the better of the two by using the impartial judgement of your reason. Away with all coyness, my dear friend, and cast now the vote entrusted to you in your capacity as judge of my loves.

heatedly with each other about these two types of love, and I still have the memory of it ringing in my ears. They were opposites, not only in their arguments but in their passions, unlike you who, thanks to your easy-going spirit, go sleepless and earn double wages, "One as a herdsman of cattle, another as tender of white flocks."¹ On the contrary, one took excessive delight in boys and thought love of women a pit of doom,² while the other, virgin of all love of males, was highly susceptible to women. So I presided over a contest between these two warring passions and found the occasion quite indescribably delightful. Gulf.¹ After paying such respects as I could to the local gods and invoking Zeus, God of Strangers, to assist propitiously in my expedition to foreign parts, I left the town and drove down to the sea with a pair of mules. Then I bade farewell to those who were escorting me, for I was followed by a throng of determined scholars who kept talking to me and parted with me reluctantly. Well, I climbed on to the poop and took my seat near the helmsman. We were soon carried away from land by the surge of our oars and, since we had very favourable breezes astern, we raised the mast from the hold and ran the yard up to the masthead. Then we let all our canvas down over the sheets and, as our sail gently filled, we went whistling along just as loud, I fancy, as an arrow does, and flew through the waves which roared around our prow as it cut through them.

7. But it isn't the time to describe at any length the events serious or light of the intervening coastal voyage. But, when we had passed the Cilician seaboard and were in the gulf of Pamphylia, after passing with some difficulty the Swallow-Islands,² those fortune-favoured limits of ancient Greece, we visited each of the Lycian cities, where we found our chief pleasure in the tales told, for no vestige of prosperity is visible in them to the eye. Eventually we made Rhodes, the island of the Sun-God, and decided to take a short rest from our uninterrupted voyaging.

8. Accordingly our oarsmen hauled the ship ashore and pitched their tents near by. I had been provided speaking, the sea between Italy and Greece south of the Adriatic, this statement is only approximately true.

For it really is the city of Helius¹ with a beauty in keeping with that god. As I walked round the porticos in the temple of Dionysus, I examined each painting, not only delighting my eyes but also renewing my acquaintance with the tales of the heroes. For immediately two or three fellows rushed up to me, offering for a small fee to explain every story for me, though most of what they said I had already guessed for myself.

When I had now had my fill of sightseeing and was minded to go to my lodgings, I met with the most delightful of all blessings in a strange land, old acquaintances of long standing, whom I think you also know yourself, for you've often seen them visiting us here, Charicles a young man from Corinth who is not only handsome but shows some evidence of skilful use of cosmetics, because, I imagine, he wishes to attract the women, and with him Callicratidas, the Athenian, a man of straightforward ways. For he was pre-eminent among the leading figures in public speaking and in this forensic oratory of ours. He was also a devotee of physical training, though in my opinion he was only fond of the wrestling-schools because of his love for boys. For he was enthusiastic only for that, while his hatred for women made him often curse Prometheus.² Well, they both saw me from a distance and hurried up to me overjoyed and delighted. clasped me by the hand and begged me to visit his house. I, seeing that they were carrying their rivalry too far, said, "Today, Callicratidas and Charicles, it is the proper thing for both of you to be my guests so that you may not fan your rivalry into greater flame. But on the days to follow—for I've decided to remain here for three or four days—you will return my hospitality by entertaining me each in turn, drawing lots to decide which of you will start."

10. This was agreed, and for that day I presided as host, while on the next day Callicratidas did so, and after him Charicles. Now, even when they were entertaining me, I could see concrete evidence of the inclinations of each. For my Athenian friend was well provided with handsome slave-boys and all of his servants were pretty well beardless. They remained with him till the down first appeared on their faces, but, once any growth cast a shadow on their cheeks, they would be sent away to be stewards and overseers of his properties at Athens. Charicles, however, had in attendance a large band of dancing girls and singing girls and all his house was as full of women as if it were the Thesmophoria,¹ with not the slightest trace of male presence except that here and there could be seen an infant boy or a superannuated old cook whose age could give even the jealous no cause for suspicion. Well, these things were themselves, as I said, sufficient indications of the dispositions of both of them. Often, however, short skirmishes broke out between them without the point at issue being settled. But, when it was time for me to put to sea, at their wish I took them with me to share my voyage, for they like me were minded to set out for Italy.

11. Now, as we had decided to anchor at Cnidus to see the temple of Aphrodite, which is famed as possessing the most truly lovely example of Praxiteles' skill, we gently approached the land with the goddess herself, I believe, escorting our ship ¹ with smooth calm waters. The others occupied themselves with the usual preparations, but I took the two authorities on love, one on either side of me, and went round Cnidus, finding no little amusement in the wanton products of the potters, for I remembered I was in Aphrodite's city. First we went round the porticos of Sostratus ² and everywhere else that could give us pleasure and then we walked to the temple of Aphrodite. Charicles and I did so very eagerly, but Callicratidas was reluctant because he was going to see something female, and would have preferred, I imagine, to have had Eros of Thespiæ ³ instead of Aphrodite of Cnidus.

12. And immediately, it seemed, there breathed upon us from the sacred precinct itself breezes fraught with love. For the uncovered court was not for the most part paved with smooth slabs of stone to form an unproductive area but, as was to be expected in Aphrodite's temple, was all of it prolific with garden fruits. These trees, luxuriant far and wide with fresh green leaves, roofed in the air around them. But more than all others flourished the berry-laden myrtle growing luxuriantly beside its mistress ⁴ and all the other trees that are endowed with beauty. Though they were old in years they were not withered or faded but, still in their youthful prime, swelled with fresh sprays. Intermingled with these were trees that were unproductive except for having beauty for their fruit—cypresses and planes that towered to the heavens and with them Daphne,¹ who deserted from Aphrodite and fled from that goddess long ago. But around every tree crept and twined the ivy,² devotee of love. Rich vines were hung with their thick clusters of grapes. For Aphrodite is more delightful when accompanied by Dionysus and the gifts of each are sweeter if blended together, but, should they be parted from each other, they afford less pleasure. Under the particularly shady trees were joyous couches for those who wished to feast themselves there. These were occasionally visited by a few folk of breeding, but all the city rabble flocked there on holidays and paid true homage to Aphrodite.

13. When the plants had given us pleasure enough, we entered the temple. In the midst thereof sits the goddess—she's a most beautiful statue of Parian³ marble—arrogantly smiling a little as a grin parts her lips. Draped by no garment, all her beauty is uncovered and revealed, except in so far as she unobtrusively uses one hand to hide her private parts. So great was the power of the craftsman's art that the hard unyielding marble did justice to every limb. Charicles at any rate raised a mad distracted cry and exclaimed, "Happiest indeed of the gods was Ares¹ who suffered chains because of her!" And, as he spoke, he ran up and, stretching out his neck as far as he could, started to kiss the goddess with importunate lips. Callicratidas stood by in silence with amazement in his heart.

The temple had a door on both sides for the benefit of those also who wish to have a good view of the goddess from behind, so that no part of her be left unadmired. It's easy therefore for people to enter by the other door and survey the beauty of her back. 14. And so we decided to see all of the goddess and went round to the back of the precinct. Then, when the door had been opened by the woman responsible for keeping the keys, we were filled with an immediate wonder for the beauty we beheld. The Athenian who had been so impassive an observer a minute before, upon inspecting those parts of the goddess which recommend a boy, suddenly raised a shout far more frenzied than that of Charicles. "Heracles!" he exclaimed, "what a well-proportioned back! What generous flanks she has! How satisfying an armful to embrace! How delicately moulded the flesh on the buttocks, neither too thin and close to the bone, nor yet revealing too great an expanse of fat! And as for those precious parts sealed in on either side by the hips, how inexpressibly sweetly they smile! How perfect the proportions of the thighs and the shins as they stretch down in a straight line to the feet! So that's what Ganymede looks like as he pours out the nectar in heaven for Zeus trapped Ares in chains when in bed with Aphrodite see Dialogues of the Gods, 21.

and makes it taste sweeter. For I'd never have taken the cup from Hebe if she served me." While Callicratidas was shouting this under the spell of the goddess, Charicles in the excess of his admiration stood almost petrified, though his emotions showed in the melting tears trickling from his eyes.

15. When we could admire no more, we noticed a mark on one thigh like a stain on a dress ; the unsightliness of this was shown up by the brightness of the marble everywhere else. I therefore, hazarding a plausible guess about the truth of the matter, supposed that what we saw was a natural defect in the marble. For even such things as these are subject to accident and many potential masterpieces of beauty are thwarted by bad luck. And so, thinking the black mark to be a natural blemish, I found in this too cause to admire Praxiteles for having hidden what was unsightly in the marble in the parts less able to be examined closely. But the attendant woman who was standing near us told us a strange, incredible story. For she said that a young man of a not undistinguished family—though his deed has caused him to be left nameless—who often visited the precinct, was so ill-starred as to fall in love with the goddess.¹ He would spend all day in the temple and at first gave the impression of pious awe. For in the morning he would leave his bed long before dawn to go to the temple and only return home reluctantly after sunset. All day long would he sit facing the goddess with his eyes fixed uninterruptedly upon her, whispering indistinctly and carrying on a lover's complaints in secret conversation.

¹ The highest throw at dice was when each face was different. It was called Venus or Aphrodite.

AFFAIRS OF THE HEART

16. But when he wished to give himself some little comfort from his suffering, after first addressing the goddess, he would count out on the table four knuckle-bones of a Libyan gazelle and take a gamble on his expectations. If he made a successful throw and particularly if ever he was blessed with the throw named after the goddess herself,¹ and no dice showed the same face, he would prostrate himself before the goddess, thinking he would gain his desire. But, if as usually happens he made an indifferent throw on to his table, and the dice revealed an unpropitious result, he would curse all Cnidus and show utter dejection as if at an irremediable disaster ; but a minute later he would snatch up the dice and try to cure by another throw his earlier lack of success. But presently, as his passion grew more inflamed, every wall came to be inscribed with his messages and the bark of every tender tree told of fair Aphrodite. Praxiteles was honoured by him as much as Zeus and every beautiful treasure that his home guarded was offered to the goddess. In the end the violent tension of his desires turned to desperation and he found in audacity a procurer for his lusts. For, when the sun was now sinking to its setting, quietly and unnoticed by those present, he slipped in behind the door and, standing invisible in the inmost part of the chamber, he kept still, hardly even breathing. When the attendants closed the door from the outside in the normal way, this new Anchises² was locked in. But why do I chatter on and tell you in every detail the reckless deed of that unmentionable night ? These marks of his amorous embraces were seen after day came and the goddess had that blemish to prove what she'd suffered. The youth concerned is said, according to the popular story told, to have hurled himself over a cliff or down into the waves of the sea and to have vanished utterly.

17. While the temple-woman was recounting this, Charicles interrupted her account with a shout and said, "Women therefore inspire love even when made of stone. But what would have happened if we had seen such beauty alive and breathing? Would not that single night have been valued as highly as the sceptre of Zeus?"

But Callicratidas smiled and said, "We don't know as yet, Charicles, whether we won't hear many stories of this sort when we come to Thespiæ. Even now in this we have a clear proof of the truth about the Aphrodite whom you hold in such esteem."

When Charicles asked how this was, I thought Callicratidas made a very convincing reply. For he said that, although the love-struck youth had seized the chance to enjoy a whole uninterrupted night and had complete liberty to glut his passion, he nevertheless made love to the marble as though to a boy, because, I'm sure, he didn't want to be confronted by the female parts. This occasioned much snarling argument, till I put an end to the confusion and uproar by saying, "Friends, you must keep to orderly enquiry, as is the proper habit of educated people. You must therefore make an end of this disorderly, inconclusive contentiousness and each in turn exert yourself to defend your own opinion; for it's not yet the time to leave for the ship, and we must employ that free time for enjoyment and also for such serious matters as can combine pleasure and profit. Therefore let us leave the temple, since great numbers of the pious are coming in, and let us turn aside into one of the feasting-places,¹ so that we can have peace and quiet to hear and to say whatever we wish. But remember that he who is vanquished will never again vex our ears on similar topics."

18. This suggestion of mine pleased them and after they had agreed to it we left the temple. I was enjoying myself as I was weighed down by no cares, but they were rolling mighty cogitations up and down in their thoughts, as though they were about to compete for the leading place in the processions at Plataea.² When we had come to a thickly shaded spot that afforded relief for the summer heat, I said, "This is a pleasant place, for the cicadas chirp melodiously overhead." Then I sat down between them in right judicial manner, bearing on my brows all the gravity of the Heliaea³ itself. When I had suggested to them that I should draw lots to decide who should speak first, and Charicles had drawn this privilege, I bade him begin the debate at once.

19. He rubbed his brow lightly with his hand and after a short pause began as follows: "To you, Aphrodite, my queen, do my prayers appeal to give help in my advocacy of your cause. For every enterprise attains complete perfection if you shed on it but the faintest degree of the arts of persuasion that are your very own; but discourses on love have particular need of you. mother. Come, you who are the most feminine of all, plead the cause of womankind, and of your grace allow men to remain male, as they were born to be. Therefore do I at the very outset of my discourse call as witness to back my plea the first mother and earliest root of every creature, that sacred origin of all things, I mean, who in the beginning established earth, air, fire and water, the elements of the universe, and, by blending these with each other, brought to life everything that has breath. Knowing that we are something created from perishable matter and that the life-time assigned each of us by fate is but short, she contrived that the death of one thing should be the birth of another and meted out fresh births to compensate for what dies, so that by replacing one another we live for ever. But, since it was impossible for anything to be born from but a single source, she devised in each species two types. For she allowed males as their peculiar privilege to ejaculate semen, and made females to be a vessel as it were for the reception of seed, and, imbuing both sexes with a common desire, she linked them to each other, ordaining as a sacred law of necessity that each should retain its own nature and that neither should the female grow unnaturally masculine nor the male be unbecomingly soft. For this reason the intercourse of men with women has till this day preserved the life of men by an undying succession, and no man can boast he is the son only of a man; no, people pay equal homage to their mother and to their father, and all honours are still retained equally by these two revered names.

20. In the beginning therefore, since human life was still full of heroic thought and honoured the virtues that kept men close to gods, it obeyed the laws made by nature, and men, linking themselves to women according to the proper limits imposed by age, became fathers of sterling children. But gradually the passing years degenerated from such nobility to the lowest depths of hedonism and cut out strange and extraordinary paths to enjoyment. Then luxury, daring all, transgressed the laws of nature herself. And who ever was the first to look at the male as though at a female after using violence like a tyrant or else shameless persuasion? The same sex entered the same bed. Though they saw themselves embracing each other, they were ashamed neither at what they did nor at what they had done to them, and, sowing their seed, to quote the proverb, on barren rocks they bought a little pleasure at the cost of great disgrace.

21. The daring of some men has advanced so far in tyrannical violence as even to wreak sacrilege upon nature with the knife. By depriving males of their masculinity they have found wider ranges of pleasure. But those who become wretched and luckless in order to be boys for longer remain male no longer, being a perplexing riddle of dual gender, neither being kept for the functions to which they have been born nor yet having the thing into which they have been changed. The bloom that has lingered with them in their youth makes them fade prematurely into old age. For at the same moment they are counted as boys and have become old without any interval of manhood. Thus foul self-indulgence, teacher of every wickedness, devising one shameless pleasure after another, has plunged all the way down to that infection which cannot even be mentioned with decency, in order to leave no area of lust unexplored.

22. If each man abided by the ordinances prescribed for us by Providence, we should be satisfied with intercourse with women and life would be uncorrupted by anything shameful. Certainly, among animals incapable of debasing anything through depravity of disposition the laws of nature are preserved undefiled. Lions have no passion for lions but love in due season evokes in them desire for the females of their kind. The bull, monarch of the herd, mounts cows, and the ram fills the whole flock with seed from the male. Furthermore do not boars seek to lie with sows? Do not wolves mate with she-wolves? And, to speak in general terms, neither the birds whose wings whirl on high, nor the creatures whose lot is a wet one beneath the water nor yet any creatures upon land strive for intercourse with fellow males, but the decisions of Providence remain unchanged. But you who are wrongly praised for wisdom, you beasts truly contemptible, you humans, by what strange infection have you been brought to lawlessness and incited to outrage each other? With what blind insensibility have you engulfed your souls that you have missed the mark in both directions, avoiding what you ought to pursue, and pursuing what you ought to avoid? If each and every man should choose to emulate such conduct, the human race will come to a complete end.

23. But at this point disciples of Socrates can resurrect that wonderful argument by which boys' ears as yet incapable of perfect logic are deceived, though those whose minds have already reached their full powers would not be led astray by them. For they affect a love for the soul and, being ashamed to pay court to bodily beauty, call themselves lovers of virtue. This often tempts me to cackle with laughter. For what is wrong with you, grave philosophers, that you dismiss with scorn what has now long given proof of its quality, and has witnesses to its virtue in its becoming grey hairs and its old age, whereas all your wise love is captivated by the young though their reasonings cannot yet decide to what course they will turn? Or is there a law that all ugliness should be thought guilty of viciousness but that the handsome should automatically be praised as good? But indeed, to quote Homer, the great prophet of truth,

‘ Although one man is worse in looks,
His frame God crowns with speech, and men rejoice
To look at him. Unerring does he speak
With charming modesty, pre-eminent
Amid the assembled men ; when through the town
He walks, men look at him as ’twere a god.’¹

And again the poet has spoken with these words :

‘ You did not then have wits to add to looks.’²

Indeed wise Odysseus is praised more than handsome Nireus.

24. How is it then that through you courses no love for wisdom or for justice and the other virtues which have in their allotted station the company of full-grown men, while beauty in boys excites the most ardent fires of passion in you? No doubt, Plato, one ought to have loved Phaedrus for the sake of Lysias whom he betrayed! Or would it have been right to love the virtue of Alcibiades¹ because he would mutilate statues of the gods and his drunken cries parodied the initiation rites of Eleusis? Who admits to having been in love with the betrayal of Athens, the fortification of Decelea against her, and a life that set its sights on tyranny? But, as godlike Plato says,² as long as his beard was not yet fully grown, he was beloved by all. But, after he had passed from boyhood to manhood, during the years when his hitherto immature intellect now had its full powers of reason, he was hated by all. What follows? That it is lovers of youth rather than of wisdom who give honourable names to dishonourable passions and call physical beauty virtue of the soul. But lest I be thought to mention famous men only to vent my hatred, let me say no more on this topic.

25. To quit this highly serious plane and descend somewhat to your level of pleasure, Callicratidas, I shall show that the services rendered by a woman are far superior to those of a boy. In the first place I consider that all kinds of enjoyment give greater delight if of longer duration. For swift pleasure flits by and is gone before we can recognise it, but delights are enhanced by being prolonged. How I wish that stingy fate had allotted us long terms of life and it consisted entirely of unbroken good health with no grief preying on our minds. For then we should spend all our days in feasting and holiday. But, since envious Fortune has grudged us these greater benefits, amongst those that we have the sweetest are those that last. Thus from maidenhood to middle age, before the time when the last wrinkles of old age finally spread over her face, a woman is a pleasant armful for a man to embrace, and, even if the beauty of her prime is past, yet

“ With wiser tongue

Experience doth speak than can the young.”¹

26. But the very man who should make attempts on a boy of twenty seems to me to be unnaturally lustful and pursuing an equivocal love. For then the limbs, being large and manly, are hard, the chins that once were soft are rough and covered with bristles, and the well-developed thighs are as it were sullied with hairs. And as for the parts less visible than these, I leave knowledge of them to you who have tried them ! But ever does her attractive skin give radiance to every part of a woman and her luxuriant ringlets of hair, hanging down from her head, bloom with a dusky beauty that rivals the hyacinths,² some of them streaming over her back to grace her shoulders, and others over her ears and temples curlier by far than the celery in the meadow. But the rest of her person has not a hair growing on it and shines more pellucidly than amber, to quote the proverb, or Sidonian crystal.

27. But why do we not pursue those pleasures that are mutual and bring equal delight to the passive and to the active partners ? For, generally speaking, unlike irrational animals we do not find solitary existences acceptable, but we are linked by a sociable fellowship and consider blessings sweeter and hardships lighter when shared. Hence was instituted the table that is shared, and, setting before us the board that is the mediator of friendship, we mete out to our bellies the enjoyment due to them, not drinking Thasian wine, for example, by ourselves, or stuffing ourselves with expensive dishes on our own, but each man thinks pleasant what he enjoys along with another, and in sharing our pleasures we find greater enjoyment. Now men's intercourse with women involves giving like enjoyment in return. For the two sexes part with pleasure only if they have had an equal effect on each other—unless we ought rather to heed the verdict of Tiresias¹ that the woman's enjoyment is twice as great as the man's. And I think it honourable for men not to wish for a selfish pleasure or to seek to gain some private benefit by receiving from anyone the sum total of enjoyment, but to share what they obtain and to requite like with like. But no one could be so mad as to say this in the case of boys. No, the active lover, according to his view of the matter, departs after having obtained an exquisite pleasure, but the one outraged suffers pain and tears at first, though the pain relents somewhat with time and you will, men say, cause him no further discomfort, but of pleasure he has none at all. And, if I may make a rather far-fetched point, but one I should make as we are in the precinct of Aphrodite, a woman, Callicratidas, may be used like a boy, so that one can have enjoyment by opening up two paths to pleasure, but a male has no way of bestowing the pleasure a woman gives.

28. Therefore, if even men like you, Callicratidas, can find satisfaction in women, let us males fence ourselves off from each other; but, if males find intercourse with males acceptable, henceforth let women too love each other. Come now, epoch of the future, legislator of strange pleasures, devise fresh paths for male lusts, but bestow the same privilege upon women, and let them have intercourse with each other just as men do. Let them strap to themselves cunningly contrived instruments of lechery, those mysterious monstrosities devoid of seed, and let woman lie with woman as does a man. Let wanton Lesbianism—that word seldom heard, which I feel ashamed even to utter—freely parade itself, and let our women's chambers emulate Philaenis,¹ disgracing themselves with Sapphic amours. And how much better that a woman should invade the provinces of male wantonness than that the nobility of the male sex should become effeminate and play the part of a woman!

29. In the midst of this intense and impassioned speech Charicles stopped with a wild fierce glint in his eyes. It seemed to me that he was also regarding his speech as a ceremony of purification against love of boys. But I, laughing quietly and turning my eyes gently towards the Athenian, said, "It was to decide a sportive piece of fun, Callicratidas, that I expected to sit as umpire, but somehow or other thanks to Charicles' vehemence I've been brought to face a more serious task. For he has shown an extraordinary degree of passion almost as though he were in the Arcopagus¹ contesting a case of murder or arson or indeed poisoning. Therefore the present moment, if any time ever did, demands that you should recall one of the speeches made to the people in the Pnyx and in this one speech of yours should expend all the resources of Athens, of Periclean persuasiveness and of the tongues of the ten orators which were marshalled against the Macedonians."²

30. After waiting for a moment Callicratidas, who, judging from his expression, appeared to me to be most full of fight, began to discourse in his turn and said: "If the assembly and the law-courts were open to women and they could participate in politics, you would have been elected their general or their champion and they would have honoured you, Charicles, with bronze statues in the market-places. For hardly even those among them thought pre-eminent for wisdom could, if given full authority to speak, have spoken about themselves with such zeal, no, not even Telesilla,³ who armed herself against the Spartiates, and because of whom Ares is numbered at Argos among the gods of the women, no nor Sappho, the honey-sweet pride of Lesbos or Theano,⁴ that daughter of Pythagorean wisdom! Pericles could not have pleaded equally well for Aspasia. But, since it is not improper for men to speak on behalf of women, let us men also speak on behalf of men; and you, Aphrodite, be propitious. For we too honour your son, Eros.

31. I thought that our merry contest had gone as far as jest allowed but, since Charicles in his discourse has been minded also to wax philosophical on behalf of women, I have gladly seized my opportunity; for love of males, I say, is the only activity combining both pleasure and virtue. For I would pray that near us, if it were possible, grew that plane-tree which once heard the words of Socrates, a tree more fortunate than the Academy and the Lyceum, the tree against which Phaedrus leaned, as we are told by that holy man¹ endowed with more graces than any other. Perhaps like the oak at Dodona, that sent its sacred voice bursting forth from its branches, that tree itself, still remembering the beauty of Phaedrus, would have spoken in praise of love of boys. But that is impossible, and we are strangers cut off in a foreign land, and Cnidus gives Charicles the advantage. Nevertheless we shall not be overcome by fear and betray the truth.

painters light-heartedly portray you, but were already full-grown at your birth, when brought forth by the earliest source of all life. For you gave shape to everything out of dark confused shapelessness. As though you had removed a tomb burying the whole universe alike, you banished that chaos which enveloped it to the recesses of farthest Tartarus, where in truth, so that, chained in an impregnable prison, it may be denied any return. Spreading bright light over gloomy night you became the creator of all things both with and without life. But compounding for mortals the special gift of harmony of mind, you united their hearts with the holy sentiment of friendship, so that goodwill might grow in souls still innocent and tender and come to perfect maturity.

33. For marriage is a remedy invented to ensure man's necessary perpetuity, but only love for males is a noble duty enjoined by a philosophic spirit. Anything cultivated for aesthetic reasons in the midst of abundance is accompanied with greater honour than things which require for their existence immediate need, and beauty is in every way superior to necessity. Thus, as long as human life remained unsophisticated and the daily struggle for existence left it no leisure for improving itself, men were content to limit themselves to bare necessities, and the urgency of their day did not allow them to discover the proper way to live. But, once pressing needs were at an end and the thoughts of each succeeding generation had been released from the shackles of necessity so that they had leisure ever to devise higher things, from that time the arts gradually began to develop. What this process was like we may judge from the more perfected of the crafts. Right from the moment of their birth the earliest men had to search for a remedy against their daily hunger, and, under the duress of immediate need, prevented by their helplessness from choosing what was better, fed on any chance herb, digging up tender roots and eating mostly the fruit of the oak.¹ But after a time this was cast before brute animals, and the careful husbandmen discovered how to sow wheat and barley and saw these renew themselves every year. And not even a madman would maintain that the fruit of the oak is superior to the ear of grain.

34. Moreover, did not men right from the start of human life, because they needed protection from the elements, skin wild beasts and clothe themselves in their woolly coats? And as refuges against the cold they thought of mountain caves or the dry hollows afforded by old roots or trees. Then, ever improving the imitative skill that started thus, they wove themselves cloaks of wool and built themselves houses, and imperceptibly the crafts that concentrated on these things, being taught by time, replaced simple fabrics with ornate garments of greater beauty, and instead of cheap cottages they devised lofty mansions of expensive marble, and painted the native ugliness of their walls with the luxuriant dyes of colour. However each of these crafts and accomplishments has, after being mute and plunged in deep forgetfulness, gradually risen, as it were, to its own bright zenith after long being set. For each man made some discovery to hand on to his successor. Then each successive recipient, by adding to what he had already learnt, made good any deficiencies.

35. Let no one expect love of males in early times. For intercourse with women was necessary so that our race might not utterly perish for lack of seed. But the manifold branches of wisdom and men's desire for this virtue that loves beauty were only with difficulty to be brought to light by time which leaves nothing unexplored, so that divine philosophy and with it love of boys might come to maturity. Do not then, Charicles, again censure this discovery as worthless because it wasn't made earlier, nor, because intercourse with women can be credited with greater antiquity than love of boys, must you think love of boys inferior. No, we must consider the pursuits that are old to be necessary, but assess as superior the later additions invented by human life when it had leisure for thought.

36. For I came very close to laughing just now when Charicles was praising irrational beasts and the lonely life of Scythians.¹ Indeed his excessive enthusiasm for the argument almost made him regret his Greek birth. For he did not hide his words in restrained tones like a man contradicting the thesis that he maintained, but with raised voice from the full depth of his throat says, "Lions, bears, boars do not love others of their own sort but are ruled by their urge only for the female. And what's surprising in that ? For the things which one would rightly choose as a result of thought, it is not possible for those that cannot reason to have because of their lack of intellect. For, if Prometheus or else some god had endowed each animal with a human mind, they would not be satisfied with a lonely life among the mountains, nor would they find their food in each other, but just like us they would have built themselves temples and, though each making his hearth the centre of his private life, they would live as fellow-citizens governed by common laws. Is it any wonder that, since animals have been condemned by nature not to receive from the bounty of Providence any of the gifts afforded by intellect, they have with all else also been deprived of desire for males ? Lions do not have such a love, because they are not philosophers either. Bears have no such love, because they are ignorant of the beauty that comes from friendship. But for men wisdom coupled with knowledge has after frequent experiments chosen what is best, and has formed the opinion that love between males is the most stable of loves.

37. Do not, therefore, Charicles, heap together courtesans' tales of wanton living and insult our dignity with unvarnished language nor count Heavenly Love as an infant, but learn better about such things though it's late in your life, and now at any rate, since you've never done so before, reflect in spite of all that Love is a twofold god who does not walk in but a single track or exert but a single influence to excite our souls ; but the one love, because, I imagine, his mentality is completely childish, and no reason can guide his thoughts, musters with great force in the souls of the foolish and concerns himself mainly with yearnings for women.

AFFAIRS OF THE HEART

This love is the companion of the violence that lasts but a day and he leads men with unreasoning precipitation to their desires. But the other Love is the ancestor of the Ogygian age, a sight venerable to behold and hedged around with sanctity, and is a dispenser of temperate passions who sends his kindly breath into the minds of all. If we find this god propitious to us, we meet with a welcome pleasure which is blended with virtue. For in truth, as the tragic poet ¹ says, Love blows in two different ways, and the one name is shared by differing passions. For Shame too is a twofold goddess with both a beneficial and a harmful role.

Shame which to men doth mighty harm and mighty good.

Nor yet are rivalries of but one sort ; two kinds
On earth there are ; the one a man of sense would praise,
The other's to be blamed ; for different is their heart.²

It need not surprise us, therefore, that passion has come to have the same name as virtue so that both unrestrained lust and sober affection are called Love.

38. Charicles may ask if I therefore think marriage worthless and banish women from this life, and if so, how we humans are to survive. Indeed, as the wise Euripides ³ says, it would be greatly to be desired if we had no intercourse with women but, in order to provide ourselves with heirs, we went to shrines and temples and bought children for gold and silver. For we are constrained by necessity that puts a heavy yoke on our shoulders and bids us obey her. Though therefore we should by use of reason choose what is beautiful, let our need yield to necessity. Let women be ciphers and be retained merely for child-bearing; but in all else away with them, and may I be rid of them. For what man of sense could endure from dawn onwards women who beautify themselves with artificial devices, women whose true form is unshapely, but who have extraneous adornments to beguile the unsightliness of nature?

39. If at any rate one were to see women when they rise in the morning from last night's bed, one would think a woman uglier than those beasts¹ whose name it is inauspicious to mention early in the day. That's why they closet themselves carefully at home and let no man see them. They're surrounded by old women and a throng of maids as ugly as themselves who doctor their ill-favoured faces with an assortment of medicaments. For they do not wash off the torpor of sleep with pure clean water and apply themselves to some serious task. Instead numerous concoctions of scented powders are used to brighten up their unattractive complexions, and, as though in a public procession, each maid is entrusted with something different, with silver basins, ewers, mirrors, an array of boxes reminiscent of a chemist's shop, and jars full of many a mischief, in which she marshals dentifrices and contrivances for blackening the eyelids.

40. But most of their efforts are spent on dressing their hair. For some pass unfavourable judgment on their own gifts from nature and, by means of pigments that can redden the hair to match the sun at noon, they dye their hair with a yellow bloom as they do coloured wool; those who do feel satisfied with their dark locks spend their husbands' wealth on radiating from their hair almost all the perfumes of Arabia; they use iron instruments warmed in a slow flame to curl their hair perforce into woolly ringlets, and elaborately styled locks brought down to their eyebrows leave the forehead with the narrowest of spaces, while the tresses behind float proudly down to the shoulders.

41. Next they turn to flower-coloured shoes that sink into their flesh and pinch their feet and to thin veils that pass for clothes so as to excuse their apparent nakedness. But everything inside these can be distinguished more clearly than their faces—except for their hideously prominent breasts which they always carry about bound like prisoners. Need I recount the scandals still more extravagant than these? The Red Sea pearls¹ worth many a talent that hang heavily from the ears, or the snakes round their wrists and arms, which I wish were real snakes instead of gold? Their heads are surrounded with crowns bearing a galaxy of Indian gems, and from their throats hang expensive necklaces, while gold has the misfortune to go right down to the tips of their toes, pinching any part of their ankles left naked—though it's iron with which their legs should by rights be shackled at the ankles!

AFFAIRS OF THE HEART

When all their body has been tricked out with the deceptive beauty of a spurious comeliness, they redden their shameless cheeks by smearing on rouge so that its crimson tint may lend colour to their pale fat skins.

42. How, then, do they behave after all these preparations? They leave the house immediately and visit every god¹ that plagues married men, though the wretched husbands do not even know the very names of some of these, be they Coliades and Genetyllides² or the Phrygian goddess³ and the rout that commemorates an unhappy love and honours the shepherd-boy.⁴ Then follow secret initiations and suspicious all-female mysteries and, to put things bluntly, the corruption of their souls. But when they've finished with these, the moment they're home they have long baths, and, by heavens, sumptuous meals accompanied by much coyness towards the men. For when they are surfeited with gorging the dishes in front of them, and even their throats can now hold no more, they score each of the foods before them with their fingertips to taste them. Meanwhile they talk of their nights, their heterosexual slumbers, and their beds fraught with femininity, on rising from which every man immediately needs a bath.

43. These then are the signs of an orderly female life; but, should one wish to examine in detail the truth about the more offensive of womankind, he will curse Prometheus in real life and burst out with these words of Menander : ¹

“ Then are not painters right when they depict Prometheus nailed to rocks ? With brand of fire

A woman all her lifetime doth consort.”

Who goes in quest of boons like these ? Who finds so wretched a life acceptable ? 44. We ought therefore to contrast with the evils associated with women the manly life of a boy. tutors, who grip in their hands the revered instruments of virtue, not the points of a toothed comb that can caress the hair nor mirrors that without artists' aid reproduce the shapes confronting them, but behind him come many-leaved writing tablets or books that preserve the merit of ancient deeds, along with a tuneful lyre, should he have to go to a music master.

45. But, after he has toiled zealously through all the lessons that teach the soul philosophy, and his intellect has had its fill of these benefits of a standard education, he perfects his body with noble exercises. For he interests himself in Thessalian horses. Soon, after he has broken in his youth as one does a colt, he practises in peace the pursuits of war, throwing javelins and hurling spears with unerring aim. Next come the glistening wrestling-schools, where beneath the heat of the mid-day sun his developing body is covered in dust; then comes the sweat, that pours forth from his toils in the contest, and next a quick bath and a sober meal suited to the activities that soon follow. For again he has his schoolmasters and records of deeds of old with hints for the study of such questions as what hero was brave, who is cited for his wisdom, or what men cherished justice and temperance. Such are the virtues which he uses to irrigate his soul while still tender, and, when evening brings an end to his activities, he metes out the tribute due to the necessities of his stomach, and then sleeps the sweeter, enjoying a rest that none could grudge after his exertions during the day.

AFFAIRS OF THE HEART

46. Who would not fall in love with such a youth? Whose eyesight could be so blind, whose mental processes so stunted? How could one fail to love him who is a Hermes in the wrestling-school, an Apollo with the lyre, a horseman to rival Castor, and one who strives after the virtues of the gods with a mortal body? For my part, ye gods of heaven, I pray that it may for ever be my lot in life to sit opposite my dear one and hear close to me his sweet voice,¹ to go out when he goes out and share every activity with him. And so a lover might well pray that his cherished one should journey to old age without any sorrow through a life free from stumbling or swerving, without having experienced at all any malicious spite of Fortune. But, if in accordance with the law governing the human body, illness should lay its hand on him, I shall ail with him when he is weak, and, when he puts out to sea through stormy waves, I shall sail with him. And, should a violent tyrant bind him in chains, I shall put the same fetters around myself. All who hate him will be my enemies and those well disposed to him shall I hold dear. Should I see bandits or foemen rushing upon him, I would arm myself even beyond my strength, and if he dies, I shall not bear to live. I shall give final instructions to those I love next best after him to pile up a common tomb for both of us, to unite my bones with his and not to keep even our dumb ashes apart from each other.

breathed love of friendship. Phocis united Orestes to Pylades right from their infancy. Taking the love-god as the mediator of their emotions for each other, they sailed together as it were on the same vessel of life. Both did away with Clytemnestra as though both were sons of Agamemnon, by both of them was Aegisthus slain. Pylades it was who suffered the more from the Avengers¹ who hounded Orestes, and he stood trial along with him in court. Nor did they restrict their affectionate friendship to the limits of Hellas, but sailed to Scythia at the very ends of the earth, one of them afflicted, the other ministering to him. At any rate, as soon as they set foot on the land of the Tauri, the Fury of matricides was there to welcome the strangers, and, when the natives stood around them, the one was struck to the ground by his usual madness and lay there, but Pylades thus showing the feelings not merely of a lover but also of a father. When at any rate it had been decided that, while one remained to be killed, the other should depart for Mycenae to bear a letter, each wished to remain for the sake of the other, considering that he himself lived in the survival of his friend. But Orestes refused to take the letter, claiming Pylades was the fitter person to do so, and showed himself almost to be the lover rather than the beloved.

For I am captain of this enterprise.”³

AFFAIRS OF THE HEART

And shortly afterwards he says

“The message give to him,
For him I'll send to Argos; he will thrive;
But whoso will may take my life.”¹

48. This too is the case generally. For, when the honourable love inbred in us from childhood matures to the manly age that is now capable of reason, the object of our longstanding affection gives love in return and it's difficult to detect which is the lover of which, since the image of the lover's tenderness has been reflected from the loved one as though from a mirror. Why then do you censure this as being an exotic indulgence of our times, though it is an ordinance enacted by divine laws and a heritage that has come down to us? We have been glad to receive it and we tend its shrine with a pure heart. For that man is truly blessed according to the verdict of the wise, “Whoso hath youthful lads and whole-hooved steeds;²

And that old man doth age with greatest ease
Whom youths do love.”³

The teaching of Socrates and his famous tribunal of virtue were honoured by the Delphic tripod, for the Pythian god uttered an oracle of truth,

“Of all men Socrates the wisest is.”⁴

² Callimachus, Aetia, Fr. 41 (Pfeiffer).

⁴ The older tradition was that the oracle replied in prose that no-one was wiser than Socrates (Plato, Apology 20 E), but an iambic version of the oracle was known to Cicero's contemporary, Apollonius Molo. This line is also quoted by Diogenes Laertius 2.37 and Origen In Celsum 7.6. (cf. Parke and Wormell, The Delphic Oracle 420).

For along with the other discoveries with which he benefited human life did he not also welcome love of boys as the greatest of boons?

49. One should love youths as Alcibiades was loved by Socrates who slept like a father¹ with him under the same cloak. And for my part I would most gladly add to the end of my discourse the words of Callimachus as a message to all :²

“May you who cast your longing eyes on youths
So love the young as Erchius bid you do,
That in its men your city may be blessed.”

Knowing this, young men, be temperate when you approach virtuous boys. Do not for the sake of a brief pleasure squander lasting affection, nor till you've reached manhood put on show counterfeit feelings of affection, but worship Heavenly Love and keep your emotions constant from boyhood to old age. For those who love thus, having nothing disgraceful on their conscience, find their lifetime sweetest and after their death their glorious report goes out to all men. If it's right to believe the children of philosophy, the heavens await men with these ideals after their stay on earth. By entering a better life at death they have immortality as the reward for their virtue.”

50. After Callieratidas had delivered this very spirited sermon, Charicles tried to speak for a second time but I stopped him ; for it was now time to return to the ship. They pressed me to pronounce my opinion, but, after weighing up for a short time the speeches of both, I said: "Your words, my friends, do not seem to me to be hurried, thoughtless improvisations, but give clear proof of continued and, by heaven, concentrated thought. For of all the possible arguments there's hardly one you've left for another to use. And, though your experience of the world is great, it is surpassed by your eloquence, so that I for one could wish, if it were possible, to become Theramenes, the Turncoat,¹ so that you could both be victorious and walk off on equal terms. However, since I do not think you'll let the matter be, and I myself am resolved not to be exercised on the same topic during the voyage, I shall give the verdict that has struck me as the fairest.

Schneider thinks him the ἐπώνυμος of Erchia, the deme of Xenophon and Isocrates, where Alcibiades' family had estates. Conceivably Ἐρχιδῆς stands for Ἐρχιδῆς and refers to Xenophon, though one might rather expect him to be a legislator like Solon.

51. Marriage is a boon and a blessing to men when it meets with good fortune, while the love of boys, that pays court to the hallowed dues of friendship, I consider to be the privilege only of philosophy. Therefore all men should marry, but let only the wise be permitted to love boys, for perfect virtue grows least of all among women. And you must not be angry, Charicles, if Corinth yields to Athens."

52. After giving this decision hurriedly in a few brief words out of regard for my friend, I rose to my feet. For I saw that he was utterly dejected, almost like one condemned to death. But the Athenian leapt up joyously with a gleeful expression on his face and started to stalk about in front of us most triumphantly, just as if, one would have thought, he had defeated the Persian fleet at Salamis. I derived a further benefit from my verdict when he entertained us to a magnificent feast to celebrate his victory. For his behaviour had in other ways, too, shown him to be generous of spirit. As for Charicles, I consoled him quietly by repeatedly expressing my great admiration for his eloquence and his able defence of the more awkward cause.

53. Well, thus ended our stay in Cnidus and our conversation in the sanctuary of the goddess with its combination of gay earnestness and cultured fun. But now, Theomnestus, you who have evoked these old memories of mine must tell me how you would have decided, if you had been judge.

THEOMNESTUS

By heaven, do you think I'm a Melitides or Coroebus¹ to cast a vote in opposition to your just verdict? For through my intense enjoyment of your narrative I thought I was in Cnidus, almost imagining this small chamber to be that temple. But nevertheless, seeing that nothing said on a festive day is unseemly, and any jesting, even if carried to excess, is thought in keeping with the holiday spirit, I must say I admired the solemnity of the very high-brow speeches evoked by love of boys, except that I didn't think it very agreeable to spend all day with a youth suffering the punishment of Tantalus, and, though the waters of beauty are, as it were, almost lapping against my eyes, to endure thirst when one can help oneself to water. For it's not enough to look at the loved one or to listen to his voice as he sits facing you,¹ but love has, as it were, made itself a ladder of pleasure, and has for its first step that of sight, so that it may see the beloved, and, once it beholds, it wishes to approach and to touch. If it only touches with but the fingertips, the waves of enjoyment run into the whole body. Once easily achieving this, love attempts the third stage and tries a kiss, not making it a violent one at first, but lightly bringing lips close to lips so that they part before completing full contact, without leaving the slightest cause for suspicion. Thus it adjusts itself to the success gained and melts into ever more importunate embraces, sometimes gently opening the mouth and leaving neither hand idle. For open embraces of the beloved when clothed give mutual pleasure; or else the furtive hand wantonly glides down into the bosom and squeezes for a moment the breasts swollen past their normal size and makes a smooth sweep to grasp with the fingers the belly throbbing full spate with passion, and thereafter the early down of adolescence, and—higher, beguile the ignorant with the speciousness of their solemn phrases. For Socrates was as devoted to love as anyone and Alcibiades, once he had lain down beneath the same mantle with him, did not rise unassailed.¹ Don't be surprised at that. For not even the affection of Achilles for Patroclus was limited to having him seated opposite

"Waiting until Aeacides should cease his song."²

No, pleasure was the mediator even of their friendship. At any rate, when Achilles was lamenting the death of Patroclus, his unrestrained feelings made him burst out with the truth and say,

"The converse of our thighs my tears do mourn
With duteous piety"³

Those whom the Greeks call "revellers" I think to be nothing but ostentatious lovers. Perhaps someone will assert this is a shameful thing to say, but, by Aphrodite of Cnidus, it's the truth.

LYCINUS

My dear Theomnestus, I won't tolerate your laying the foundation of a third discourse, for this one should hear only on a holiday, and further talk should be banished far from my ears. Let us not linger any longer, but go out to the market-place. For it's now the time when the fire should be lit in honour of Heracles. It's a pleasant sight and reminds those present of what he suffered on Oeta.⁴

IN PRAISE OF DEMOSTHENES

I FOLLOW most editors in rejecting In Praise Of Demosthenes as non-Lucianic because of its lack of inspiration, its inferior Greek and its avoidance of hiatus. It was presumably written in imitation of the style of Lucian by a sophist who knew Plutarch's Life of Demosthenes; it also has a certain amount in common with Pseudo-Plutarch's Lives of the Ten Orators and a few superficial resemblances with Libanius' Life of Demosthenes. The date of the work is quite uncertain. If the scene is Rhodes (see note on c. 2 and introduction to Affairs of the Heart), it was probably written before the middle of the fourth century, and therefore before the time of Libanius. There is a good edition by F. Albers (Leipzig, 1910).

A. Bauer (Paderborn, 1914) revives a theory that the work is by Lucian and was meant as a satirical caricature of the encomia of contemporary rhetoricians. Bauer suggests that Lucian has deliberately made the speakers guilty of grotesque exaggerations and of the bad Greek of his day, while the Macedonian memoirs so offend against all the rules of historical probability that the author must be waxing scornful about the flights of fancy indulged in by encomiasts. Though this interpretation is ingenious, it is unconvincing. If the vast majority of scholars have failed to see any satire in a work attributed to Lucian the satirist, the satire is well concealed indeed. It is a poor satirist who does not make his satire, however subtle, recognisable for what it is.

1. While I was walking on the far side of the Porch—on the left as you go out—shortly before noon on the sixteenth¹ of the month, I was met by Thersagoras who will perhaps be known to some of you. He's a short man with a hooked nose and hair that's just going grey and is endowed with a virile constitution. Now, when I saw him still coming towards me, I said, "Where's Thersagoras the poet going? And where's he come from?"²

"I've been at home" he said, "and I've come here."

"For a stroll?" said I.

"Of course," said he, "that's precisely what I want. For I got up in the small hours resolved to honour Homer's birthday with the first-fruits of my poetry."

"Most commendable too," said I, "that you should repay him for the schooling he's given you."

"Well that's how I started," said he, "and now, before I know it, it's noon. So, as I said, I need a walk. 2. But a much more particular reason for coming here was that I wanted to pay my respects to this gentleman" (he pointed to the figure of Homer ;

"For my part," said he, "I think I can credit Homer with the fine flow of my compositions of both last night and this morning. For a heaven-sent frenzy has brought me poetic inspiration. But you will judge for yourself. For I've been carrying this tablet round with me on purpose in the hope of meeting a friend who was at leisure; and you, I think, are well placed for leisure."

"You're a lucky fellow," said I, "and just like the winner of the long-distance race, who, having already washed off his dust and now able to enjoy the rest of the spectacle, was minded to regale the wrestler with his tales, though the wrestling event was expected to be announced at any moment; the wrestler, however, retorted 'But you wouldn't have so many tales to tell if you were on your mark at the starting-line!' So too you seem to me to have won the long-distance race for poetry and to be indulging yourself at my expense, when I'm really on tenterhooks about my fortunes in the sprint."

"Just how do you think I'll be making things awkward for you?" asked he with a laugh.

4. "Well," said I, "perhaps you consider Demosthenes of too little account to be on a par with Homer? If you're proud of your encomium of Homer, is Demosthenes a minor and trivial matter to me?"

"You're being libellous," said he, "for I wouldn't start these great ones quarrelling, even if I am more minded to range myself on Homer's side."

5. "Well spoken!" said I. "And wouldn't you think me to be on the side of Demosthenes? But, though you thus show respect for speech, your choice makes it obvious that you think that only in poetry lies any achievement, while you despise rhetorical speeches as if you were a cavalryman galloping past infantrymen."

"I hope I won't go as mad as all that, even if no little madness is needed by those who are to reach the portals¹ of poetry."

"Let me point out that prose authors too need some divine inspiration² if they are not to appear pedestrian and dull-witted."

"I know that, my friend," said he. "I often find pleasure in comparing the works of the speech-writers and of Demosthenes in particular with those of Homer for, shall I say, intensity, pungency and inspiration; I set 'wine-laden'³ against the 'drunkenness, dissolute dances and debauchery'⁴ of Philip, and 'One omen is best'⁵ against 'Brave men must with brave hopes in their hearts'⁶ and

6. I delight also to compare their emotional passages, their descriptive passages, figures of speech, variations that relieve monotony, their resumptions after digressions, the elegance of their well-chosen comparisons, and their style so free from all barbarisms. 7. Moreover, I've often thought—for I shan't hide the truth—that Demosthenes, who gave the proverbial rein to freedom of speech, takes Attic slackness to task with greater grace than he who called the Achaeans 'Achaeannesses,' ⁷ and has a more sustained intensity of tone in doing full justice to the tragedies that befall the Greeks than he who inserts dialogues at the most desperate point of a battle and dissipates the flow of action with speeches. 8. Often Demosthenes with his measured clauses, rhythmical flow and cadences gives me the same pleasure as poetry, just as

Homer too is not devoid of antitheses or balanced clauses or violent figures of speech or purity of style. But yet it seems to be the gift of nature that to each capacity is added excellence in its use. For how could I despise Clio,¹ when I know her to be as powerful as Calliope? 9. But perhaps it would be better to leave these matters shrouded in obscurity. My eulogy, you can see, is limited to a very narrow field; I must praise his poetry as distinct from his life and collect an impression of his wisdom inferred from his hexameters alone.

10. But your path," he said, "lies there before you, an easy and smooth one over definite and familiar ground; like food ready before you it only requires from you the seasoning of words. Has not fortune coupled with Demosthenes everything that is great, everything that is glorious, everything that is famous? Was not his fatherland Athens, 'the rich, the renowned, the bulwark of Greece'? ² But, if I had got my hands on Athens, I would allow myself the poetic licence of introducing also the amours, law-suits and sojourns there of the gods, their gifts and the tale of Eleusis.³ And once her laws, her courts, her public festivals, her Piraeus, her colonies and her memorials in honour of victories by sea and land are also brought in, well, to quote Demosthenes himself,⁴ 'nobody at all could find words to do justice to these.' Indeed, I'd have a quite limitless supply of material, and none of it would be thought irrelevant to my panegyric, since it is traditional for

Now I leave Athens and my account continues with his trierarch² father, a 'golden foundation' to quote Pindar.³ For there was no greater distinction at Athens than to be classed rich enough to be a trierarch. 12. As for Homer, his education and training have not been recorded for us by history, but the eulogy, having no material in his upbringing, training and education, must tackle right away the products of his workmanship, without indeed having taken refuge in the laurel of Hesiod, which easily gives poetic inspiration even to shepherds.⁴ But you, I am sure, can at this point say plenty about Callistratus, and you have that distinguished list of Alcidamas, Isocrates, Isaeus and Eubulides.⁵

Although there were countless pleasures at Athens to seduce even those subject to the rigours of paternal control, although youths are of an age swift to slip into the ways of debauchery, and he was at complete liberty to do so because of the neglect of his guardians, yet he was possessed by that love of philosophy and civic virtues, which led him to the doors not of Phryne,¹ but of Aristotle, Theophrastus, Xenocrates and Plato.

13. And at this point, my good friend, you could wax philosophical in your discourse about the two impulses² of love that come upon men, the one that of a love like the sea, frenzied, savage and raging like stormy waves in the soul, a veritable sea of Earthly Aphrodite surging with the fevered passions of youth, the other the pull of a heavenly cord of gold that does not bring with fiery shafts afflicting wounds hard to cure, but impels men to the pure and unsullied Form of absolute beauty, inspiring with a chaste madness such souls as, to quote the tragic poet,³

‘Are nigh to Zeus and kindred of the gods.’

14. To love all things are possible; it can endure a shaved head, a cave, a mirror, the threat of a sword, it can afford articulate speech to its tongue, take up acting late in life, perfect the memory, despise noisy interruptions, and add nights to days spent in toil.⁴

IN PRAISE OF DEMOSTHENES

Who does not know how fine an orator your Demosthenes became as a result of all this, using thought and language to give solidity to his speech, and careful arrangement to achieve perfection in persuasiveness, distinguished for his grandeur, strong in the power of his lungs, most temperate in his control over word and thought, most versatile in the variety of his tropes? Indeed he alone of orators,¹ to quote the bold words of Leosthenes,² 'gave his words both life and the strength that comes from the craftsman's hammer.'

15. For, unlike Aeschylus who, according to Callisthenes,³ wrote his tragedies on wine, thereby giving his spirit vigour and fire, Demosthenes did not tipple but drank water⁴ while composing his speeches. Thus it was that Demades, we are told, made fun of this water-bibbing of Demosthenes, by saying that others spoke to water,⁵ but Demosthenes wrote to it. And to Pytheas the ring of Demosthenes' speeches seemed to reek of the midnight oil.⁶ This part of your discourse," said he, "is on subject-matter also available to me. For, when it comes to discussing the poetry of Homer, I've always had a field no smaller than yours.

16. But if you should pass on to his benefactions, his financial generosity and the unmitigated-distinction of his political career"—he had now started on a list of qualities which he seemed intent on completing—but I laughed and said, “Do you really intend to drench my ears with the rest of your account like a bath-man with his canful? ¹”

“Indeed I do!” said he. “The public banquets he gave, his voluntary expenditure on choruses,² the warships, the wall, the ditch he paid for, the prisoners he ransomed, the maidens he provided with a dowry,³ all of which were acts of the highest public service, the embassies on which he served, the laws he carried, the magnitude of his political services—when I think of all these, I feel like laughing at one who knits his brows for fear that words for Demosthenes’ deeds may fail him.”

17. “Perhaps, my good fellow,” said I, “you think that I am really the only one to have spent a life in the pursuit of rhetoric without having had my ears deafened ⁴ with the exploits of Demosthenes?”

“I do,” said he, “if, as you say, we need some help for our discourse; unless the opposite is the case with you, and you cannot fix your eyes on the bright glory of Demosthenes because of the radiant light investing him. For I myself had the same experience with Homer at first. At any rate I nearly dropped my eyes, thinking I couldn’t look my subject in the face. Then somehow I raised my eyes, because, I suppose, I was gradually growing accustomed to look it in the face without turning away as it were from the sun’s rays and showing myself a bastard member of Homer’s family.

18. You seem to me to have another great advantage over me," he continued, "for since Homer's reputation rests as it were upon the single anchor of his poetic power, I've had to lay hands on all of it at one and the same time. But, if you were to turn your mind to dealing with the whole of Demosthenes once and for all, you would be in the greatest difficulty as you darted to and fro round your discourse without knowing what your mind should seize upon as its primary topic, just as happens to gourmands at Syracusan banquets,¹ or lovers of listening or of spectacle when confronted with countless delights for the ear or the eye. They don't know which to pursue with their ever-changing desires. I think that you too leap to and fro, not knowing on what to set your feet, as you revolve under the attraction of his nobility of nature, his fiery ardour, his sober life, his eloquence, his courage in time of action, his contempt for many great financial rewards, his justice, humanity, loyalty, pride, wisdom, and each of his many great political services. Perhaps, therefore, when you see on one side decrees, embassies, public speeches and laws, and on the other naval expeditions, Euboea, Megara, Boeotia, Chios, Rhodes, the Hellespont and Byzantium, you don't know on which to rest your thoughts as you're whirled round and round by such an embarrassment of riches. 19. Just as Pindar after turning his mind to many topics expressed his difficulties thus ²:

20. It's easy enough," he continued, "to avoid losing your way. You must seize upon any one feature, or else take his oratory by itself, and concentrate this discourse of yours just upon that. For that one would find even the oratory of Pericles inadequate. For, though his thunderings and lightnings and his 'sting of persuasion' ⁵ are known to us by tradition, yet we cannot see his actual oratory, which clearly had no such vivid effect or lasting quality as that of Demosthenes, and could not stand up to the acid test of time. But when it comes to the works of Demosthenes—but let their description be left to you, should you turn to that topic.

21. But, if you turn to the high qualities of his spirit or his civic virtues, it would be well to isolate any one particular quality to discuss, or, if you wish to indulge yourself, choose two or three in all and you will have quite sufficient material for your discourse. For in everything about him is great distinction. And, if we praise part of his make-up rather than all of it, it is in the Homeric tradition to compose praises for parts of his heroes, for their feet, heads or hair, and sometimes even for their accoutrement or their shields, while even the gods did not object to being praised by the poets in their hymns for a distaff, bow or aegis, not to mention a part of the body or a spiritual quality, while to arrive at a complete list of their kindnesses to man is quite impossible. Demosthenes therefore will not object to a eulogy that is confined to one of his virtues, since a comprehensive eulogy of Demosthenes would be beyond even his own powers."

22. After Thersagoras had finished this disquisition, I said, "I think that you have made one thing quite clear to me; you have shown me you are more than just a good poet, by adding prose to your verse and including in a gift to Homer the subsidiary topic of Demosthenes."

"On the contrary," said he, "I did it for you. Wishing to suggest to you the ease of your task, I was encouraged to run through my discourse in the hope that you might find some relief from your worries by listening to me."

"Then be assured that you've made no headway" said I. "Be careful that on the contrary my complaint hasn't been aggravated."

"You have tried to cure the things that would trouble the beginner essaying discourse, but these have already been removed by the passing of long-gone years, so that for this complaint your remedies have gone stale."

"Why, it's just this that makes the cure. Cures are like roads. The better you know them, the greater your confidence in them."

"You are innocent, Thersagoras," said I, "if you think that in all these years I've only managed to devise one alternative position, and you don't realise that I've changed and varied every conceivable angle and turn so that I'm afraid I'll end up by being like Proteus."¹ fee, like the fee at Athens for attending the assembly or serving on the jury. But be sure to be grateful to me."

26. "I shall be grateful," said I, "even before I know what you're talking about. What are you talking about?"

"I once read the memoirs of the Macedonian royal family which gave me such delight at the time that I made a special point of acquiring the book. Now I've just remembered I have it at home. In addition to giving details of Antipater's activities at home, it describes his dealings with Demosthenes, which I think you'd be specially interested in hearing."

"Well," said I, "you shall be rewarded at once for your good news by being allowed to read the rest of your poetry. I won't be deprived of seeing your promise become fact. You've provided me with excellent fare in honour of Homer's birthday, and it looks as if you yourself will also be the host for Demosthenes' birthday celebrations."

27. Well, when he'd read out everything else on the tablet, we stayed long enough for the poem to be accorded the praises it deserved, before repairing to Thersagoras' house. Though he had some difficulty, he was able to lay his hands on the book. I took it and went away for the time being. But, now that I've read it, I've made up my mind that I shall not change anything at all but shall read it to you word for word. For Aesculapius receives no less honour if those who visit him have not composed their own paean but the compositions of Isodemus of Troezen and Sophocles¹ are sung, while in the eyes of Dionysus, though composition of comedies or tragedies in his honour has been discontinued, the works of earlier poets win just as much favour for those who produce them at the proper season because they are thought to have honoured the god.

28. Thus the book—the following dramatic scenes are the part of the memoirs that concerns us—this book tells us how the presence of Archias was announced to Antipater. Now, Archias, in case any of the younger amongst you doesn't know it, had been commissioned to arrest the exiles. He had further been instructed to bring Demosthenes from Calauria² to Antipater by use of persuasion rather than force. Moreover Antipater was excited at this prospect as all the time he was expecting to see Demosthenes. Accordingly, when he heard of the arrival of Archias from Calauria, he gave orders for him to be summoned to his presence immediately just as he was. 29. When he entered—well the book itself will complete the story.

ARCHIAS

Joy be with you, Antipater.

ANTIPATER

And why shouldn't it, if you've brought Demosthenes?

ARCHIAS

I've brought him as best I could. For I have with me the urn containing the remains of Demosthenes.

Hyperides, a false friend who fawned upon the populace, and thought it no shame to ingratiate himself with the mob by bringing false charges against Demosthenes and lending himself as a tool for those designs which soon were regretted by the very men whose favour he sought. At any rate, not long after these charges were brought, Demosthenes, we've heard, had a triumphant home-coming to outdo that of Alcibiades. But Hyperides did not care nor was he ashamed to use against those that once had been his dearest friends the tongue which so unfeeling a creature certainly deserved to have cut out.

ARCHIAS

32. And how is Demosthenes not the greatest foe to us of all our foes ?

ANTIPATER

He is not so to the man who cares for loyalty of disposition and holds dear to him every nature that is free from guile and steadfast. For of a truth the honourable is honourable even when it is in enemies, and virtue is to be esteemed everywhere it is found. I am no worse a man than Xerxes who admired Bulis and Sperchis,¹ the Spartans, and released them, when he could have killed them. But of all men it was Demosthenes I always admired through having met him myself twice, though hurriedly, at Athens, and from what I heard of him from others. I admired him for his political activities themselves rather than, as one might think, for the eloquence of his speeches, even though Python is nothing in contrast with him, while the Attic orators are paltry when compared with the thunderous intensity of his voice, the rhythm of his phrases, the conciseness of his thoughts, the unbroken sequence of his arguments, the cumulative blows his words can strike. We certainly regretted the day when, trusting in Python and his promises, we had assembled the Greeks at Athens with the intention of discrediting the Athenians, and then were confronted with Demosthenes who discredited us. Really, nothing could approach his power of speech.

33. But I held that power secondary, assigning it the place of a mere tool;¹ it was Demosthenes himself whom I admired tremendously for his spirit and his intellect and because he kept his soul unswerving on a straight course through all the tempestuous waves of fortune and never gave in in the face of any danger. And I knew that Philip too held the same opinion as I did about him. At any rate, when a report reached Philip from Athens of a speech to the people directed against him, and Parmenio burst into anger and uttered a taunt against Demosthenes, "Parmenio," said Philip, "Demosthenes deserves the right to speak freely; he is the only popular orator in Greece whose name appears nowhere on my expense accounts. Yet I should rather it did than that I had entrusted myself to scribes who row at the benches.² But in fact each of them is listed as having received from me gold,

34. "My own view, Parmenio," he said, "is that on any Athenians speaking in Athens who value me above their own country I would expend my silver but not my friendship. But, if anyone hates me for the sake of his country, I wage war against him as against a citadel, a wall, a dockyard or a moat, but yet admire him for his virtue, and think his city lucky to possess him. The one type I should most gladly destroy along with their city once I no longer need them, but this sort of man I should rather have had here with us than my Illyrian or Triballian cavalry² and all my mercenaries, for I consider persuasiveness of speech and weight of intellect in no way inferior to force of arms."

35. That was what he said to Parmenio, and he said the same sort of thing to me too. For, when Diopithes' expedition was sent out from Athens,³ I was worried but he laughed heartily and said, "Do you fear an Attic general or soldier on our account? Their men-of-war, their Piraeus and their dockyards are, to me at least, just idle talk and nonsense. What could be achieved by men who celebrate festivals of Dionysus and spend their time in feasting and dancing? But, as it is, he alone remains vigilant, is at hand to meet every crisis, keeps up with every move we initiate, and counters us with his own plans. In no scheme, no enterprise, no plot can we escape his attention, and the fellow is literally an obstacle and bulwark preventing us from possessing everything at a single stroke. It was no fault of his at any rate that we have taken Amphipolis, acquired Olynthus, Phocis and Thermopylae, and gained control over the Chersonese and the area round the Hellespont.

36. But against their will he keeps rousing his fellow citizens, who are asleep as though drugged, by using his outspoken words as it were to cut away and cauterise their sloth with little heed for what they would like to hear. He transfers the revenues spent on the theatre to the armies, he is by his trierarchie laws¹ building up their navy, though it has been almost completely ruined by lack of organisation, he awakens his city's honour long prostrated in pursuit of advocates' or jurors' fees,² by raising up these people long recumbent to recall their ancestors and emulate the feats accomplished at Marathon and Salamis,³ and unites the Greeks into federations of alliance. His attention cannot be escaped; he cannot be deceived: he cannot be bought any more than the king of the Persians⁴ bought the famous Aristides.

37. Him therefore ought we to fear rather than all their men-of-war and all their armadas ; for what Themistocles and Pericles proved themselves to the Athenians of old, Demosthenes is to those of to-day, for he rivals Themistocles in intellect and Pericles in spirit. At any rate he has captured for them the willing ear of Euboea, Megara, the region round the Hellespont and Boeotia. And I'm glad," he continued, " that the Athenians appoint Chares, Diopithes, Proxenus and the like to be their generals, but keep Demosthenes at Athens on the speaker's platform. For, if they had given him control of their arms, ships and troops, yes, and their moments of crisis and their finances, I'm afraid it's Macedonia he would have made the matter of issue between us, for even now using mere decrees to oppose us, he is quick to follow us around everywhere, overtaking us, finding new resources, sending out fleets, marshalling his forces, ever changing his policy to counter us."

38. Such were the things that Philip used to say to me about Demosthenes on that and many other occasions, for he regarded it as one of his boons from fortune that Demosthenes was not general, since he admitted that even his words shooting out from Athens like battering-rams and artillery¹ shook and confounded his plans. For on the topic of Chaeronea not even after his victory there would he stop telling us into what great danger Demosthenes had brought us. "For," he would say, "even if we have won a victory we never expected thanks to the cowardice of their generals, the lack of discipline in their troops and the unbelievable way that fortune, which has helped us much on many occasions, veered to us, yet on this one day he made me risk losing my kingdom and my life,¹ since he had united the noblest cities, collected together the whole might of Greece, compelled not only Athenians but also Thebans and all the other Boeotians, Corinthians, Euboeans, Megarians and all the mightiest powers in Greece to brave the hazard of battle, and had not even allowed me to cross into Attic soil."

39. Thus was he continually speaking about Demosthenes. Moreover, to those who said that he had a great adversary in the Athenian people, he said, "For me the only adversary is Demosthenes, and Athenians without Demosthenes are no better than Aenianes² or Thessalians." Whenever he sent envoys to the cities of Greece, if the Athenians sent in return any of their other spokesmen, he would rejoice in a victory won by his embassy, but when Demosthenes appeared he would say, "Our envoys went in vain. 40. For it is impossible to set up trophies of victory over the speeches of Demosthenes."

Thus spoke Philip. But we would be infinitely more at a disadvantage than Philip if we captured Demosthenes. Whatever do you think we would do with such a man, Archias? Would we lead him like an ox to the slaughter or would we not much rather make him our adviser on Greek affairs and indeed on our whole empire? For I had a natural sympathy with him from the first because of his political record itself, but still more because of the testimony of Aristotle. At any rate he would never stop telling Alexander and us that, though he had had so many pupils go to him, he'd never admired anyone so much for the greatness of his natural gifts, his self-discipline in developing them, his weight, his speed, his freedom of expression and his fortitude.

41. "But you," he said, "think as if you were dealing with a Eubulus,¹ a Phrynon, or a Philocrates, and try to win him too to your view by bribes, though he is one who has expended his inheritance on the Athenians, both privately on the needy and publicly on the state. Are you mistaken enough to think you will frighten a man, who has long made it his policy to expose his life to the uncertain fortunes of his country, and to be angry when he upbraids your actions? No, he has no fear even of the assembly of the Athenians. You have not realised," he continued, "that he makes patriotism the basis of his political life, while his only personal aim is that politics should be his training ground for philosophy.

42. "This explains, Archias, why I was so very eager to have his company, and to hear him tell me his views on the current situation, and, if I needed it, to dissociate myself from the succession of toadies who confront me, and to hear plain speaking from a free mind and be given sincere advice. Moreover it would have been fair to warn him how ungrateful give Antipater the adulation that belongs to the god. I could hold Macedonians dearer to me than Athenians and be sharing now in your good fortune, if I had ranged myself on your side along with Callimachon, Pytheas and Demades. I could even at this late hour have changed my fortune, did I not feel shame before the daughters of Erechtheus and before Codrus.¹ So, it was my choice, when fortune deserted, not to change sides with it. For one can find honourable refuge in a death which frees one from danger of any disgrace. So too now, as far as lies with me, I shall not shame Athens by voluntarily choosing slavery and giving up the tomb's finest ornament² which is liberty.

Demosthenes, you must pardon me, my good fellow, if it is not in my nature to show myself base."

48. At that precise moment I contemplated tearing him away from the altar by force. But he, perceiving it, let me see his contempt and, looking at the god, said, "Archias seems to think that only arms, triremes, walls and camps afford strength and refuge to the souls of men. Yes, he seems to despise my armament which will never be found wanting by Illyrians, Triballians or Macedonians, and is stronger than that wooden wall¹ of old, which the oracle of the god declared to be impregnable. Helped by this my foreknowledge, fearless was I ever in my public life, fearless was ever my boldness in the face of the Macedonians. Naught recked I of Euctemon,² Aristogiton,³ Pytheas or Callimedon. I did not regard Philip in the past, nor do I now regard Archias."

49. After he had spoken thus, he said, "Do not lay your hand upon me. For, as far as concerns me, the temple will suffer no wrong, but, once I have paid my respects to the god, I shall willingly follow you." And that was what I expected him to do, and, when he put his hand to his mouth, I thought that he was merely offering a kiss to the god."

ARCHIAS

Later by torturing a serving-woman we discovered that he had long been husbanding a poison to gain freedom by releasing his soul from his body. For indeed he had no sooner passed the threshold of the temple than he looked at me and said, "Take this to Antipater, but Demosthenes you will not take, no, by those who . . ." And I thought he was about to add the words, "who fell at Marathon."¹ But after these farewell words his soul flew away. 50. That too, Archias, was typical of Demosthenes. How invincible was the soul, with which he was blessed! What a brave spirit he had! How statesmanlike was his concern to keep firm hold of liberty, his sacred trust! But Demosthenes is gone to partake of the life in the Isles of the Blest that is said to be the lot of demi-gods, or is gone by the routes to heaven that souls are thought to take, that he may be a deity attendant upon Zeus, God of Freedom; as for his corpse, we shall send it back to Athens, a nobler offering to that land than those who fell at Marathon.

HALCYON

It is generally agreed that this dialogue is not by Lucian, though it occurs in I and other Lucianic MSS. Though it is also found in some MSS. of Plato, and is mentioned by Athenaeus 506 C when he is listing the works of Plato, Platonic scholars are agreed that it is not by Plato. Apart from the fact that it mentions Myrto (see note on c. 8), its position in the Platonic MSS., Parisinus 1807 (A) and in its copy, Vat. Gr. 1 (O) is amongst the spuria, between Sisyphus and Eryxias.

Diogenes Laertius 3.62 says that it is a supposititious work of Plato and that it was attributed to a certain Leon by Favorinus (c. 80 to c. 150 A.D.). As Athenaeus also records that it was ascribed to Leon the Academic by Nicias of Nicaea (of unknown date), Leon must be regarded as the probable author.

This Leon is presumably the man described by Plutarch in Phocion 14.4 as having studied along with Phocion at Athens in the Academy; he was prominent in his native Byzantium as an orator, politician and opponent of Philip of Macedon in 340 B.C. Further details about his life are uncertain; he may have died in battle c. 339 B.C. or been killed by his countrymen because Philip had told the Byzantines he had contemplated treachery. If so, this Leon could not have become a Peripatetic or written history about Alexander as recorded in the Suda

(where there is some confusion between Leon of Byzantium and one Leon of Alabanda). He is also confused with Python of Byzantium (see Gulick's note on Athenaeus 550); he may also be the same man as the Leonidas mentioned in Aelian, V.H. 3.14 and Athenaeus 442; cf. also Plutarch, Nicias 22.3, Moralia 88 F, Philostratus, Lives of the Sophists 204 (485). As Leon of Byzantium is called the son of Leon in the Suda, some of the difficulties may perhaps be resolved by assuming that the activities of a father and his son have been ascribed to one man, and Leon the father was a statesman and Academic, while Leon the son was a Peripatetic and historian.

Lucian can scarcely have been the author, even if Favorinus and Nicias were wrong. Though Halcyon imitates the style of Plato with a skill not unworthy of Lucian, there is nothing that is distinctively Lucianic. The reference to Myrto (see note on c. 8) could conceivably mean that the dialogue has a satirical purpose; but it seems unlikely that Lucian would have worked in this way, or would have failed to use the motif of Socrates the bigamist¹ elsewhere, if he had it in his repertoire. It is more natural to take the dialogue at its face value; if it was not written by Leon the Academic, it may show the influence of Stoic thought, as suggested by Brinkmann, who dates it to the second century B.C.

From a chronological viewpoint too, it seems improbable that Lucian can be the author. Even supposing that Lucian's birth was in the reign of Trajan (as given in the Suda) rather than in that of Hadrian (as generally supposed) and that he wrote Halcyon when very young, one would also have to assume that an aged Favorinus¹ read it at once, and immediately published his mistaken views about its author. It may have found its way into the Lucianic corpus because its subject or its alternative title, On Transformations, led to confusion with The Ass (or its original The Transformations of Lucius of Patras).

¹ Lucian's Socrates merely subscribes to Plato's advocacy of communism of wives; cf. Philosophies For Sale, 17, The Carousal, 39.

HALCYON

¹ Lucian describes Favorinus as 'a little before our time' in The Eunuch, 7. Furthermore Demonax 12 suggests that Favorinus was considerably older than Demonax, who may have been one of Lucian's teachers; cf. ibid. 1 and my notes on the Solecist, pp. 16 and 17 of this volume.

1. What is the voice that has come to us, Socrates, from the shore and the promontory yonder in the distance? How sweet it is to the ears! What in the world is the creature that utters it? For things that live in the sea are surely mute.

SOCRATES

A sort of sea-bird, Chaerephon, called the Halcyon,¹ much given to wailing and weeping, about which from times of old a fable has been handed down by men. They say that it was once a woman, the daughter of Aeolus, son of Hellen, that she yearned for the love of her dead husband, Ceyx of Trachis, son of the Morning Star, handsome son of a handsome father, and lamented for him, and then, acquiring wings by some divine dispensation, she began to fly like a bird over the seas, once she had wandered over the whole earth without being able to find him.

Not large ; yet she has received great honour from the gods because of her love for her husband. CHAEREPHON

You are right ; for today appears to be a halcyon day, and yesterday was like that too. But, in the name of the gods, how in the world is one to believe the primeval story, Socrates, that birds once turned into women or women into birds ? For anything of that sort is clearly quite impossible.

that are attainable, unattainable ; often this is due to inexperience, often to the infantility of our minds. For in reality every man seems to be infantile, even if he be of great age, since a lifetime is very short and as brief as one's infancy in comparison with eternity. How, my good friend, can people who do not know the powers of the gods and the supernatural beings or indeed the powers of all Nature, say whether any such thing is possible or impossible ? Did you see, Chaerephon, how great the storm was the day before yesterday ? Even at the thought of those flashes of lightning, peals of thunder and enormous winds fear could well assail a man ; one would have supposed that the whole earth was on the very point of collapsing in ruins.

4. After a short time however a marvellous state of good weather came about, and this has lasted till now. Which, then, do you think is the greater and more difficult task—to change that irresistible tempest and turmoil into such fine weather or to effect the transformation of a woman's shape into that of a bird ? For, as for that sort of thing, even those children in our midst who know how to model, can, when they take clay or wax, easily fashion many different shapes, using the same lump many times. To the divine power which has great and incomparable superiority to our abilities, all such things may be very easy indeed. 5. Whoever, Socrates, could conceive or express any such thing? It's unattainable even in words.

SOCRATES

Well, when humans too are compared with one another, do we not observe that great superiorities exist in their capacities and incapacities? Men in their prime as compared with absolute infants five or ten days after their birth, have extraordinary superiority in respect of capacity and incapacity in almost all the activities of life, in all that they accomplish not only by means of those arts of ours with their many skills, but also by means of the body and the soul; for clearly children of the age I mentioned cannot even conceive of such things.

6. Moreover the strength of a single full-grown man is immeasurably greater than theirs. For one man could easily overcome many thousands like them; for, of course, the age that first attends upon man is by natural law completely helpless and resourceless. When therefore man differs, it seems, so much from man, what shall we think that all heaven, as compared with our powers, would appear like to those capable of submitting such things to their gaze? Perhaps, then, many will think it probable that the power and wisdom and intellect of the universe similarly excel our gifts by as much as the size of the universe surpasses the stature of Socrates or Chaerephon.

7. To you, moreover, and to me, and to many more like ourselves many things are impossible which to others are very easy. For playing on the pipes is more impossible to the unskilled in piping, and reading or writing in the manner of the literate is more impossible to the illiterate, as long as they remain ignorant, than turning birds into women, or women into birds. Nature, depositing in the honeycomb a creature that is footless and wingless, gives it feet and wings, embellishes it with a great and beautiful variety of manifold colours and produces the bee, wise artificer of divine honey; from speechless and lifeless eggs she fashions many kinds of creatures, winged, terrestrial and aquatic, by employing, as some say, holy devices of the mighty ether.

8. ¹ Xanthippe is the only wife of Socrates mentioned by Plato or Xenophon. For Myrto see Plutarch, Aristides 27, Diogenes Laertius 2.26, Athenaeus 556 A and A. E. Taylor, Varia Socratica, First Series, pp. 61-62. Plutarch and Athenaeus say that Myrto was first mentioned as a wife of Socrates by Aristotle in On Nobility Of Birth. (This work is now lost and its Aristotelian authorship is questioned by Plutarch and modern authorities.) Plutarch says that according to some authorities she was the grand-daughter of Aristides The Just, and that Socrates took her as an extra wife because she was a widow too poor to get a husband and lacked the necessities of life. Athenaeus calls her the great-granddaughter of Aristides and claims he can quote authority to prove that bigamy was legalised at that time to counteract a shortage of population (a few passages in the orators suggest this may have been so; Diogenes Laertius mentions Satyrus and Hieronymus of Rhodes as vouching that Socrates had Myrto as an extra wife under Xanthippe and Myrto,¹ about your devout and affectionate love for your husband, and in particular of the honour which you obtained from the gods. Will you also do the same, Chaerephon ?

CHAEREPHON

It is right that I should do so, Socrates, and what you have said contains a twofold admonition to wives and husbands as regards their relations with one another.

SOCRATES

Then it is time to say adieu to Halcyon and proceed from Phalerum to the city.

CHAEREPHON

Indeed it is ; let us do so.

this dispensation; according to Aulus Gellius 15.20.6 Euripides enjoyed legalised bigamy of this sort; cf. also λειπανδρεῖν in the Suda); other writers gave her as Socrates' first wife. Diogenes Laertius attributes to Aristotle two (false) statements, firstly that she succeeded Xanthippe as Socrates' wife (cf. Plato, Phaedo 60 A) and secondly that she was the daughter of Aristides The Just (this mistake suggests that Athenaeus is right and she was the daughter of another Aristides, the grandson of The Just). Taylor notes the friendship between Socrates and the family of Aristides mentioned in the Laches and suggests that Socrates may have made himself responsible for her protection and that the "mischievous genius of Aristoxenus," one of the earlier authorities for the story, turned the incident into bigamy. An improbable alternative is that this could have been the doing of a comic poet. In any case this mention of Myrto is a fairly clear indication that the Halcyon is not the work of Plato.

GOUT AND SWIFT-OF-FOOT

GOUT and SWIFT-OF-FOOT

MANY editors have regarded one or both of these poems as spurious, while others have taken Swift-of-Foot and Gout to be the beginning and end of the same play. There are no solid grounds, however, for doubting that Gout is the work of Lucian. Swift-of-Foot is the work of an inferior versifier, who may well be Acacius, the friend of Libanius.

The poet of Gout shows himself superior in style, use of poetic vocabulary and particularly metrical skill. Gout is a metrical tour-de-force (see notes on 11.30, 87, 113 and 312), whereas the writer of Swift-of-Foot does not venture away from iambs throughout a whole 171 lines. The iambs of Gout, too, are superior and 11.1-29 and 54-86 conform to the strictest rules of tragedy, though later there are liberties with the final cretic, anapaests in the second and fourth feet, and unnatural word divisions in resolved feet. All these liberties the composer of Swift-of-Foot has allowed himself, but he betrays his inferiority by his use of spondees(!) in the fourth foot, by his trisyllabic fifth feet and by irregular elisions in 1.122 and perhaps in 1.47. Swift-of-foot therefore looks like the work of an inferior imitator.

In his excellent edition of the two poems J. Zimmermann uses these further arguments in favour of the authenticity of Gout and spuriousness of Swift-of-Foot:

(1) Gout's position in Γ admits of no doubt, whereas Swift-of-Foot together with the Saltatores of

GOUT AND SWIFT-OF-FOOT

Libanius and the apocryphal Cynic may not have been in the archetype.

(2) Disrespect for the gods is implicit in Gout, but not necessarily in Swift-of-Foot.

(3) The rarer metres are appropriate to a writer of Lucian's day; see notes on ll. 30, 87, 113 and 312. In particular the strange brand of anapaests found in ll. 87 seq. was used for religious hymns, a tempting target for Lucianic parody.

Furthermore Lucian probably suffered from gout himself. Though in earlier works, Menippus 11, Saturnalian Letters 28, (cf. Epigram 47) he agreed with the Roman satirists in regarding gout as the rich man's disease, he seems to have had gout himself in his old age; see Hercules 7. Moreover the sympathetic references to gout in Salaried Posts 31, 39, suggest that he had gout himself and perhaps also that he had written about it. Salaried Posts seems to be a comparatively late work written when Lucian was beginning to fall on evil days, and I follow Sinko in dating Gout to about the same time.

The evidence in favour of Acacius as the writer of Swift-of-Foot is contained in two letters of Libanius written to Acacius in 364 A.D. Letter 1368 contains the words, "Another thing too could make us friends—I mean Gout, bless her, who has chosen the same time for showing her affection for your foot and mine."

Letter 1380 reads as follows:

"Your comedy brought enjoyment and laughter to all who heard it, and that was almost everyone. Indeed there was no-one but would have wished himself in the grip of gout so as to be enabled to compose such a comedy about it. I have not, as you think, infringed the convention of those who have recently become subjects of this queen, but have blamed the hardness of the road, pottery (sc. on which I've stubbed my foot), a visit to the theatre or to a display of wild animals as the reason for my being confined to bed—anything, in fact, but the true reason. The doctors, in whose hands I put myself completely, had allowed themselves to be deceived along with me. But when I had enjoyed the benefits of their deception for a whole month, and was resolved to know the cause of the trouble, I was prevented by them. They knew well enough, I would say, but they didn't want to distress me. But when its inroads came repeatedly and it ravaged me and laid me waste more cruelly than the Spartans did Attica, I surrendered and gave my affliction its proper name, thinking it the height of shamelessness to deny a plight that was obvious. You who now hear the truth after three months may think that I've broken the rule of those in my condition. But a man who has had his share of gout cannot be expected to do violence to the truth indefinitely. You too will soon admit this—or rather you've already made a similar confession to the god and appealed to him to be your ally against gout. Now I am in the audience listening to refrains about horses left unused and bad servants who don't support their masters and carry them, but, as the year proceeds, it will erase all my excuses except one, and we shall become a chorus, though we number more than the comic chorus, and, with you as its leader, our chorus will sing songs in honour of her whose passion is for feet."

Acacius was one of the chief literary figures of Athens in the middle of the fourth century A.D. He composed an encomium of Aesculapius and also epic poems. Like his friend Libanius he supported Julian the Apostate in loyalty to the old gods. Sievers' theory that Acacius wrote Swift-of-Foot in 364 A.D. is therefore at least possible, though Libanius' mention of a chorus has led some scholars to doubt his theory and others to ascribe Gout rather than Swift-of-Foot to Acacius.

I follow Zimmermann in assuming that the mock hypothesis was added by a later editor who wished to unite Swift-of-Foot and Gout into a single play. Whoever wrote the hypothesis, it can scarcely have been Acacius. The author of an encomium of Aesculapius would hardly have made Swift-of-Foot a son of Podalirius; see note on Swift-of-Foot, init.

See Ox. Pap. XXXI, 2532 for fragments (written in a hand dated to the early third century A.D.) of an elegiac poem on gout with striking resemblances to Swift-Foot 56 and 123.

O hateful name, abhorred by all the gods,
O Gout, most rich in woes, Cocytus' child,
Whom in dark hidden depths of Tartarus
Fury Megaera from her womb brought forth
And fed thee at her breast, thou cruel babe, 5
To whom Allecto too did offer suck,
Abominable name, which god below
Sent thee to earth above, thou scourge of men ?
For, if a reckoning awaits the dead
And they must pay for sinful deeds of life, 10
Why punish Tantalus with sight of drink,
Torture Ixion with that whirling wheel,
Or Sisyphus with rock in Pluto's halls ?
Oh better far that all alike who sin

 Just as this shrivelled, luckless frame of mine,
 From finger tips right down to tips of toe,

 And static plight makes agony more grim, 20

 Doth sweep o'er flesh ablaze with whirling flame
 Like Etna's crater full of blazing fire,
 Or narrow chasm of Sicilian straits

Release thine eyes from deep dark cloud of mist, 60
 Go out of doors and into light of sun
 That thou mayst draw a breath of clearest air,
 For now ten days have gone and five besides,
 Since I'm immured in dark away from sun,
 And feel my body waste on unmade bed. 65
 My spirit's fain, and eager wish I have
 To hasten to the door and walk abroad,
 But feeble body cannot serve my will.
 Yet strive, my heart, make haste, for thou must know
 That gout-struck pauper, if he wish to walk 70
 But cannot move, is held as good as dead.
 But stay !
 For who are these that busily ply their staffs
 And carry wreaths of elder * on their head ?
 Which god is worshipped by this fervent band ? 75
 Say, Healing Phoebus, do they honour thee ?
 Not so ; no Delphic laurel wreathes their heads.
 Or is this hymn sung to the Bacchic god ?
 Not so ; no ivy marks their locks as his.
 O strangers, tell us who ye are that come. 80
 Speak out, and let your lips speak true, my friends.
 Say which the goddess whom ye hymn with praise.

CHORUS

And who are you that ask, and what your race ?
 For, as your staff and gait do indicate,
 The unconquered goddess has thee for her thrall. 85

1. 74 Pliny, Nat. Hist. 24.35 tells us that the elder was used in treating many ailments including gout, while Theophrastus, Enquiry into Plants, 3.13.4 says that those being initiated into the mysteries bathed their hands and heads in elderberry juice.

parody of the cosmological hymn of the Naasseni, quoted by Hippolytus in Book V of the Refutation of Heresies (written c. 230 A.D.). The Naasseni were Gnostics so called because they glorified the serpent ("naas" in Hebrew for "serpent") and are perhaps to be identified with the Ophites (ὄφεις = serpent) who are mentioned by Lucian's contemporary, Irenaeus (Against Heresies 1.30).

Lucian however shows little detailed knowledge of contemporary religion; if this is a contemporary allusion by Lucian, it refers more probably to the serpents of Aesculapius and the mysteries of Glycon; cf. Alexander, 18.

1. 99 Ophion was a Titan, who ruled before Cronos and Rhea; cf. Ap. Rhod. 1. 503 and note on l. 87.

 What juice ? What exudation from a tree ?
 All creatures' bones, sinews and skins they try,
 Their fat, blood, marrow, urine, dung or milk.
 Some potions drink of four ingredients,
 Or else of eight, but more men seven use. 170
 Some purge themselves with sacred medicine,
 Others are mocked by chants impostors sell,
 And other fools fall for the spells of Jews,
 While others look for cure to Cyrrane.*
 But all these shifts I curse and treat with scorn, 175
 And those who use them and would test my strength
 I e'er assail with greater wrath by far ;
 But those whose will is not opposed to mine
 Do find me kind of heart and well-disposed.
 For he that shareth in my mystic rites 180
 Learns first and that right soon to curb his tongue, Delighting all by choosing well his words.
 And all who see him laugh and clap their hands,
 When to the baths he's borne on others' backs.
 For I am Ruin, she whom Homer* sang, 185
 Who walketh o'er men's heads with dainty steps,

But these two were right bold and impudent,
 Who told their fellows all and swore on oath
 No longer was thy power to be revered,
 But they would banish thee from lives of men. 215
 Therefore I've bound their feet with fetters strong.
 Four days I've sped, a quarter mile I've come.

GOUT

What haste you've made, my messenger most swift !
 Say what the pathless land whose bounds you've left.
 Oh speak out clear that I may know at once. 220

MESSENGER.

A five-runged ladder first of all I left
 Whose loosely-fitted wooden limbs did shake,
 And next a beaten floor awaited me,
 A pavement hard and firm that hurt my feet.
 O'er this I sped in haste with painful steps, 225
 And then I came upon a gravel path
 With sharp and pointed stones most hard to cross.
 Then next a smooth and slippery road I met ;
 Forward I pressed though mud clung to my steps
 Making my strengthless ankles drag and trail. 230
 In crossing this my limbs did drench my feet
 With sweat and drained away my ebbing strength.
 Then wearied in each limb I found myself
 Where was a highway broad but dangerous ;

 For, mystic thine, I could not run with speed. 240

GOUT

A worthy enterprise was this, good sir,
 And well accomplished. And I your zeal
 Shall now reward with well-earned privilege.
 And may this gift delight your heart right well.
 For three whole years your pains will lighter be. 245
 But, cursed villains hateful to the gods,
 Say who are ye and what your lineage,
 That dare to pit yourselves with mighty Gout,
 Whose strength e'en Cronus' son * cannot subdue.
 Speak, knaves ; for even of the demigods 250
 Great numbers I've o'ercome, as sages know.
 Priam, though Doughty * called, had gouty feet ;
 Achilles, Peleus' son,* did die of gout ;
 Bellerophon * Gout's trials had to face,
 And gouty too was Thebes' king * Oedipus, 255

- l. 253 Achilles had the epithet "podarces" (see previous note) in Homer. However Gout goes on to poke fun at heroes famous in legend for mishaps to their feet, and this may be a reference to the comparatively unfamiliar story that Achilles was invulnerable except for his "Achilles' tendon" by which his mother held him while dipping him in the Styx to ensure his invulnerability.
- l. 254 The reference is unknown. Perhaps Bellerophon injured a foot when falling off Pegasus.
- l. 255 Oedipus (Swell-Foot) was exposed at birth with a pin driven through this ankles; cf. Sophocles, O.T. 718, Euripides, Phoenissae 22.

GOUT

Then, cursed ones whose death will bitter be, 275
 Is there on earth a drug of such effect,
 An ointment potent which can check my might ?
 But come, upon these terms let us agree ;
 Let's test this mighty remedy to find
 If it or if my burning pain prevails. 280
 Come, grim-faced ones, from every side fly here,
 Ye torments, comrades of my frenzied rites,
 Approach, come near, I say ; do thou inflame
 Their feet from heel to utmost tip of toe ;
 Their ankles thou assail ; and from their thighs 285
 Down to their knees make thou rank poison flow ;
 And ye must twist and knot their fingers all.

PAINS

Look, all we've done, just as you've bidden us.
 The luckless men lie shrieking loud and clear
 From our attacks which torture every limb. 290

GOUT

Now, strangers, come ; more surely let us learn
 If ye find help from rubbing on this salve.
 For, if it clearly counteracts my power,
 I'll leave this world, and disappear from sight
 Deep down to utmost depths of Tartarus. 295
 Let's see if salve applied relieves your pain.

GOUT

And, for rivalling Leto, mother Niobe will ne'er forget

But she mourneth still and poureth floods of tears spin her web ;

For men's daring boldness cannot match the wrath of blessed gods, 320
Such as Zeus or Leto or Athene or the Pythian seer.
May the pain you bring be gentle, universal goddess
Gout,
Light and mild and stingless, hurting little, free from pain,
Easily borne and swiftly ceasing, weak and feeble, ready for a stroll.
Many sorts * one will find there are of luckless men ; 325
But let those who have gout find relief from their woes
By being schooled to endure * and accustomed to pain.
In this way cheerfully you who share this our lot
Will forget all your pain,
Seeing that what we thought has not been brought about, 330
While a way for what we not at all did expect
Has been found by the god. So let each sufferer
Learn to bear mockery and submit to men's taunts.
For this thing is of just such a kind.

SWIFT-OF-FOOT

[Swift-of-Foot was the son of Podaleirius and Astasia,¹ distinguished for his beauty and strength, and a devotee of the wrestling-school and the hunt. He would often laugh with contempt when he looked at victims in the grasp of remorseless Gout, saying that the ailment amounted to nothing at all. The goddess is angry and runs in through his feet. When he bears up sturdily and denies his plight, the goddess puts him on his back completely.

The dramatis personae are Gout, Swift-of-Foot, Tutor, Doctor, Pain, Messenger.

The play is set in Thebes, and the chorus consists of local sufferers from gout who cross-question Swift-of-Foot. The play is a very witty one.]

GOUT

I have a name men dread and loathe to hear ;
 They call me Gout, a fearsome scourge to men ;
 I bind their feet in sinew-knotting cords,
 When I have swept unseen into their joints.
 I laugh to see men smitten down by me, 5
 Who will not tell the truth of their distress,
 But practised are in offering vain excuse,
 For each beguiles himself with lying tongue,
 Pretending to his friends he's sprained a leg
 Or put his ankle out, hiding the cause. 10
 For what denieth he, thinking to hide,
 The passing time reveals against his will.
 Then overcome he mentions me by name,
 When carried forth to glee of all his friends.
 And Torment helpeth me in all these woes. 15
 For without him I am myself but nought.
 Therefore it gnaws and catcheth at my heart,
 That, though Torment is cause of woes to all,
 Yet no one rails at him with curses foul,
 But execrations vile at me they hurl, 20

SWIFT-OF-FOOT

As if they hoped my bondage to escape.
 But why this empty talk? Why don't I tell
 Why I am here with wrath I cannot brook?
 That noble man of guile, bold Swift-of-Foot,
 Against us plots, and says I am as nought. 25
 And I, like any female stung by wrath,
 Vengeful, with bite that none may cure, aimed true,
 As is my wont, at knuckles of his feet.
 And now dread Torment works in narrow field,
 Boring his feet below with piercing stabs, 30
 While he deceives his poor old dominie,
 Pretending race or wrestling caused the sprain,
 And, hiding lameness of his foot, my prey,
 Comes forth from home alone unhappy man.
 Whence comes upon your feet this torment dread, 35
 From no wound sprung, brooking nor walk nor stance?
 Just like an archer when he speeds his shaft,
 I draw his sinews taut and him constrain
 To say, "The worst of pains are healed by time."

 And cast me to the ground, my child so lame.

For racking twisting torment makes thee dance.

DOCTOR

Where can I find, my friends, famed Swift-of-Foot,
The one whose foot is sore, whose gait impaired?
For I, a doctor, heard from friend of mine 70
He suffers terribly and cannot stand.
But look, I see him lie not far away
Stretched out upon his back upon a bed.

What do you, Saviour? Safety be not thine.
How can you bring him pain of metal born? 100
Fresh woes from ignorance his feet you give,
For false the words your ears have heard just now.
No blow he felt in wrestling or in race,
As he maintains. But list to what I say.
At first he walked at home in perfect health, 105
But, after eating much and drinking much,
The wretch dropped on his bed and slept alone.
Then in the night from sleep he woke to shout
As though by devil struck and filled with fear.
He cried, "Alas! Whence comes this evil curse? 110
Perchance tormenting fiend doth grasp my foot."
And so alone last night upon his couch,
He sat mourning his feet like plaintive tern.*
But when the cock's note shrill announced the morn,
He came and laid a cruel hand on me, 115
And moaning, fevered, said his foot did ail.

Alas, whence comes upon me this fresh pain 150

Piercing my other foot, racking it too ?

Why am I rooted here when I would move,

And childish do I dread to move my feet,

Like infant babe who's filled with sudden fright ?

But I implore you, Saviour, by the gods 155

Grudge not, but use all skill at your command

For saving me, since otherwise I'm done ;

For shafts of hidden pain assail my feet.

I shall dispense with those long-winded words
Of doctors lending only company, 160
But knowing nought of concrete remedy;
I'll be concise and tell my patient all.
First hear you've no escape from pit of woes.
For on your feet you've donned no chains of steel Devised to show up rogues to all the world, 165
But wear a cruel bane * that none can see,
Whose heavy weight no mortal man can lift.

Whence comes this hidden pain to drill my foot ?
Come take, support my hands before I fall 170

And aged take and lead thy youthful hand.

1. 166 Or 'clog', if, as L. A. Post suggests, this is a reference to ποδοδάκη 'stocks', which is sometimes spelled ποδοδάκη (= 'foot-bane').

THE CYNIC

THOUGH a few editors accept The Cynic as Lucianic, the style of this dialogue bears little resemblance to that of Lucian ; for a detailed analysis see J. Bieler, Ueber die Echtheit des Lucianischen Dialogs Cynicus (Hildesheim, 1891). Moreover, the position of The Cynic in Γ is not above suspicion.

The fact that The Cynic emerges with such credit has also been used as an argument against Lucianic authorship. This in itself need not be so, as Lucian gives favourable pictures of Cynics, e.g. Menippus, Diogenes and the Cynic of Zeus Cathechized ; Lucian has little quarrel with sincere Cynics, but only with charlatans such as Peregrinus. What is suspicious, however, is the poor figure cut by Lycinus, when confronted by the Socratic methods of the Cynic ; there is, admittedly, some parallelism in the feeble role played by Tychiades in The Parasite, but that dialogue is not serious like The Cynic and may not be the work of Lucian.

I therefore follow Fritzsche in regarding this piece as the work of a Cynic defending his sect against the criticisms made by Lucian. It may well have been written, as Fritzsche suggests, in the time of Julian the Apostate, who encouraged the beliefs and philosophies of ancient times, but it could be considerably earlier.

1. You there, why in heaven's name have you the beard and the long hair, but no shirt? Why do you expose your body to view, and go barefooted, adopting by choice this nomadic antisocial and bestial life? Why unlike all others do you abuse your body by ever inflicting on it what it likes least, wandering around and prepared to sleep anywhere at all on the hard ground, so that your old cloak carries about a plentiful supply of filth, though it was never fine or soft or gay?

CYNIC

I need no such cloak. Mine is the kind that can be provided most easily and affords least trouble to its owner. Such a cloak is all I need. 2. But you tell me something, I beg you. Don't you think that there's vice in extravagance?

Because, upon my troth, I do not think your manner of life more economical than that of the average man, but more wanting—or rather completely wanting and ill-provided. For you're no better than the paupers who beg for their daily bread.

Then, as far as feet are concerned, I seem to be in no worse condition than the average man ?

So it seems.

Well, take the rest of my body. Is it in any worse state ? For if it's worse, it's weaker, since the virtue of the body is strength. Is my body weaker ?

LYCINUS

It doesn't seem to be.

CYNIC

Then neither my feet nor the rest of my body would appear to be wanting in respect of protection. For, if they were wanting, they would be in bad condition ; for want is everywhere an evil and detracts from the condition of the things in which it occurs. Another point. My body seems to be no worse nourished from finding its nourishment in the food that comes first to hand.

Because, in heaven's name, although Nature, whom you hold in such honour, and the gods have given the earth for all to enjoy, and from it have provided us with many good things, so that we have abundance of everything to meet not only our needs but also our pleasures, nevertheless you share in few if any of all these things, and enjoy none of them any more than do the beasts. You drink water just as they do, you eat anything you find, as do the dogs, and your bed is no better than theirs. For straw is good enough for you just as it is for them. Moreover the coat you wear is no more respectable than that of a pauper. However, if you who are quite content with all this turn out to be of sound mind, god was wrong in the first place in making sheep to have fleeces, in the second place in making the vines to produce the sweetness of wine, and yet again in giving such wonderful variety to all else with which we are provided, our olive-oil, honey and the rest, so that we have foods of all sorts, and pleasant wine, money, a soft bed, beautiful houses, and everything else admirably set in order. For those many costly provisions for happiness, in which you take such pride, come to you only at the cost of great misery and hardship. For consider, if you will, the gold for which you pray, the silver, the expensive houses, the elaborate dresses, all that goes along with these; consider how much they cost in trouble, in toil, in danger, or rather in blood, death and destruction for mankind, not only because many men are lost at sea for the sake of these things, and suffer terribly in searching for them abroad or manufacturing them at home, but also because they are bitterly fought for, and for them you lay plots against one another, friends against friends, children against fathers, and wives against husbands. Thus too it was, I imagine, that Eriphyle¹ betrayed her husband for gold.

9. And yet all these things happen, although the many-coloured robes can afford no more warmth, and the gilded houses no more shelter, though neither the silver nor the golden goblets improve the drink, nor do the ivory beds provide sweeter sleep, but you will often see the prosperous unable to sleep in their ivory beds and expensive blankets. you that the many foods so elaborately prepared afford no more nourishment, but harm the body and produce diseases in it ? 10. And need I mention all the inconvenient things that men do and suffer to gratify their sexual passions ? Yet this is a desire which is easy to allay, unless one aims at licentious indulgence. And in gratifying this desire men do not even seem to be content with madness and corruption, but now they pervert the use of things, using everything for unnatural purposes, just as if in preference to a carriage a man chose to use a couch as if it were a carriage.

LYCINUS

And who does that ?

CYNIC

You do so, when you use human beings as beasts of burden, bidding them carry your couches on their shoulders as though they were carriages, and you yourself lie up there in state, and from there steer your men as though they were donkeys, bidding them take this turning rather than that. And the more any of you does this, the luckier he is thought. 11. And, as for those who not only use flesh for food, but also conjure forth dyes with it, as for example the purple-dyers, don't you think that they too are making an unnatural use of the handiworks of god ?

LYCINUS

By Zeus, that I do not ; for the flesh of the purple-fish can produce dye as well as food.

But it doesn't exist for that purpose. For in the same way too a man could force a mixing-bowl into service as a pitcher; but that's not why it came into being. But how could anyone describe in full the misery of people like these? For it's so very great. Yet you reproach me for not wishing to share it with them. But I live like that moderate man, making a feast of what is in my reach, and using what is least expensive, with no desire for dainties from the ends of the earth.

12. Furthermore, if you think I live the life of a beast, because the things I need and use are small and few, it may be that the gods are inferior even to the beasts—if we use your argument. For the gods need nothing. But, so that you may learn more exactly what is involved in having few needs, and what in having many, reflect that children have more needs than adults, women than men, invalids than healthy people, and, in general, the inferior everywhere has more needs than the superior. Therefore the gods have need of nothing, and those nearest to them have the fewest needs.

13. Do you think that Heracles, the best of all mankind, a godlike man and rightly considered a god, was compelled by an evil star to go around naked, wearing only a skin and needing none of the same things as you do? No, he was not ill-starred, he who brought the rest of men relief from their banes, nor was he destitute who was the master of both land and sea; for no matter what he essayed, he prevailed over all everywhere, and never encountered his equal or superior, till he left the realm of men. Do you think that he couldn't provide blankets and shoes, and that was why he went around in the state he did? No one could say that; no, he had self-control and hardness; he wished to be powerful, not to enjoy luxury. And what of his disciple, Theseus? Was he not king of all the Athenians, son of Poseidon, as they say, and best man of his day? 14. Yet he too chose to wear no shoes, and to walk about naked; he was pleased to have a beard and long hair, and not only he but all the other men of old too. For they were better men than you, and not a single one of them would have submitted to the razor any more than would a lion. For they thought that soft smooth flesh became a woman, but, just as they themselves were men, so too they wished to appear men, thinking the beard an ornament of men, as is the mane an ornament of horses and lions, to whom god has given additional gifts to grace and adorn them. So too has he given men the addition of a beard. These men of old therefore are the ones that I admire and should like to emulate, but the men of to-day I do not admire for the "wonderful" prosperity they enjoy in the matter of food and clothing, and when they smooth and depilate every part of their bodies, not even allowing any of their private parts to remain in its natural condition.

that I myself may not need bedclothes any more than do the lions, nor expensive fare any more than do the dogs. But may I have for bed to meet my needs the whole earth, may I consider the universe my house, and choose for food that which is easiest to procure, Gold and silver may I not need, neither I nor any of my friends. For from the desire for these grow up all men's ills—civic strife, wars, conspiracies and murders. All these have as their fountainhead the desire for more. But may this desire be far from us, and never may I reach out for more than my share, but be able to put up with less than my share.

16. Such, you see, are our wishes, wishes assuredly far different from those of most men. Nor is it any wonder that we differ from them in dress when we differ so much from them in principles too. But you surprise me by the way that you think that a lyre-player has a particular uniform and garb, and, by heavens, that a piper has his uniform, and a tragic actor his garb, but, when it comes to a good man, you don't think that he has his own dress and garb, but should wear the same as the average man, and that too although the average man is depraved. If good men need one particular dress of their own, what one would be more suitable than this dress which seems quite shameless to debauched men and which they would most deprecate for themselves ?

17. Therefore my dress is, as you see, a dirty shaggy skin, a worn cloak, long hair and bare feet, but yours is just like that of the sodomites and no one could tell yours from theirs either by the colour of your cloaks, or by the softness and number of your tunics, or by your wraps, shoes, elaborate hair-styles, or your scent. For nowadays you reek of scent just like them—you, who are the most fortunate of men ! Yet of what value can one think a man who smells the same as a sodomite ? So it is that you are no more able to endure hardships than they are, and no less amenable to pleasures than they. Moreover, your food is the same as theirs, you sleep like them and walk like them—or rather just like them prefer not to walk but are carried like baggage, some of you by men, others by beasts. But I am carried by my feet wherever I need to go, and I am able to put up with cold, endure heat and show no resentment at the works of the gods, because I am unfortunate, whereas you, because of your good fortune, are pleased with nothing that happens, and always find fault, unwilling to put up with what you have, but eager for what you have not, in winter praying for summer, and in summer for winter, in hot weather for cold, and in cold weather for hot, showing yourselves as hard to please and as querulous as invalids. But whereas the cause of their behaviour is illness, the cause of yours is your character.

18. Again you would have us change and you reform our manner of life for us because we often are ill-advised in what we do, though you yourselves bestow no thought on your own actions, basing none of them on rational judgment, but upon habit and appetite. Therefore you are exactly the same as men carried along by a torrent ; for they are carried along wherever the current takes them, and you wherever your appetites take you. Your situation is just like what they say happened to the man who mounted a mad horse. For it rushed off, carrying him with it ; and he couldn't dismount again because the horse kept running. Then someone who met them asked him where he was off to, and he replied, "Wherever this fellow decides," indicating the horse. Now if anyone asks you where you're heading for, if you wish to tell the truth, you will say simply that it's where your appetites choose, or more specifically where pleasure chooses, or now where ambition, or now again where avarice chooses ; and sometimes temper, sometimes fear, or sometimes something else of the sort seems to carry you off. For you are carried along on the back not of one but of many horses, and different ones at different times—but all of them mad. As a result they carry you away towards cliffs and chasms. But before you fall you are quite unaware of what is going to happen to you.

20. And I'd have you know that my style of dress becomes not only good men but also gods, though you go on to mock it ; and so consider the statues of the gods. Do you think they are like you or like me ? And don't confine your attentions to the statues of the Greeks, but go round examining foreigners' temples too, to see whether the gods themselves have long hair and beards as I do, or whether their statues and paintings show them close-shaven like you. What's more, you will see they are just like me not only in these respects but also in having no shirt. How then can you still have the effrontery to describe my style of dress as contemptible, when it's obvious that it's good enough even for gods ?

THE PATRIOT

THE PATRIOT

THE poor Greek of the Philopatris with its syntactical foibles, its confusion of dialects and its mixture of prose and verse forms betrays this work as being not by Lucian but by an imitator. It is in fact a Byzantine work, as first realised by C. B. Hase in 1813, though the most important contribution to the study of the dialogue is S. Reinach's "La question du Philopatris," in Revue Archéologique 1902.

The dialogue was written in the time of Nicephorus Phocas who recaptured Crete from the Saracens in 961, usurped the throne of Byzantium in 963, won victories over the Saracens in Cilicia, Mesopotamia and Syria in 964-6, and over the Bulgars in 967. He captured Antioch and Aleppo in 969, and, had he not been murdered in December of that year, had visions of further conquests. The dialogue was perhaps written in the spring of 969, or, less probably, of 965, but its purpose is uncertain.

Phocas' campaigns were expensive and, despite his military successes, he was unpopular with the Byzantines because of his heavy taxes and his debasing of the coinage. He had also forfeited the favour of his old friends, the monks, by marrying the notorious widow Theophano, by forbidding money being spent on new monasteries and legacies being given to existing ones and by insisting that new bishops should be approved by the Emperor. His unpopularity was such that he was almost killed in a riot in 967.

THE PATRIOT

The first part of this dialogue seems to be a light-hearted attack on contemporary humanists who had excessive enthusiasm for classical culture. The second half is more serious and appeals to all patriots to support the emperor in his great campaigns against the enemies of his country. The prophets of doom may perhaps be the monks ; whoever they are, they are criticised for indulging in superstitious and unpatriotic opposition to a great warrior king. The alternative titles seem both to refer to Critias who shows himself a patriot in the second half of the dialogue, though earlier he needs instruction on the Trinity. The author is perhaps a sophist who hopes that the hint of poverty in Critias' last speech will lead to a suitable reward from the emperor.

TRIEPHO

Is that why the Goddess Grey of Eye is invincible?

She was a beautiful and lovely maiden. But, ever since Perseus, a noble hero famed for his magic, cast his spells around her and treacherously cut off her head, the gods have kept her as their defence.

TRIEPHO

I was unaware of this glorious fact that gods need men. But what use did she have during her lifetime ? Was she a courtesan entertaining men in public inns or did she keep her amours secret and call herself a virgin ?

CRITIAS

By the unknown god in Athens,¹ she remained a virgin till her head was cut off.

And if one did cut off a virgin's head, would that prove something to frighten most men ? For I know that countless maidens have been cut limb from limb.

¹ Pythagoreans used the term tetraktys of the sum of the first four numbers ($1 + 2 + 3 + 4$), i.e. 10, which they regarded as the most perfect numbers; the number 8 was thought by some Pythagoreans to represent justice (though this was more often 4 or 9); as 30 had no particular significance for them, τριακός perhaps here means "month," which Pythagoreans regarded as sacred.

THE PATRIOT

But he also says that all life and its vicissitudes too are governed by Fate,

"Then will he meet what Fate and thread of Spinners grim Did spin for him the day his mother gave him birth,"¹ and that delays on foreign soil arise from Fate.

"To Aeolus we came who gave me welcome glad And sped me on my way. For not as yet was it

My Fate that I should reach beloved fatherland."²

Thus the poet has testified that all things are brought about by the Fates. He tells us that Zeus did not wish his son³ "from woeful death to save,"⁴ but rather

"Did pour upon the earth beneath a bloody rain

To honour his dear son, whom Patroclus was soon In Troy to slay."⁵

Therefore, Triepho, you musn't feel inclined to say anything more about the Fates, even if perchance you were lifted 'twixt earth and sky along with your teacher and were initiated into mysteries.

TRIEPHO

If here I stay and fight around the Trojans' town,
My home-coming is gone, but glory will be mine
To all eternity. But if I reach my home,

Moreover in the case of Euchenor

"He knowing well his deadly doom set foot on ship ;

For Polyidos, that fine old man, had told him oft Either he must succumb to sickness grim at home, Or else sail with the Greeks and fall by Trojan hand." ²

16. Are these things not written in Homer ? Or do you think them ambiguous, dangerous and deluding words ? If you wish, I'll also tell you about the speech of Zeus. Didn't he tell Aegisthus ³ that if he refrained from adultery and plotting against Agamemnon he was fated to have a long life, but if he attempted to do these things he wouldn't have to wait for death ? This I too have often foretold, maintaining that if you kill your neighbour you will meet death at the hands of Justice, whereas if you refrain from such actions, you will have an excellent life,

"Nor will you quickly meet with death that endeth all." ⁴

Don't you see how imperfect, ambiguous and unstable are the words of the poets ? Therefore leave all these aside, so that they may list your name too in the heavenly books of the good.

He will pay creditors what they are owed and pay all rents and public dues. He will welcome to him even police magistrates² without enquiring after their calling." And he went on talking still more offensive rubbish. But those around him found pleasure in his words and were engrossed by the novelty of what they heard.

THE PATRIOT

I blushed for shame and walked away dejectedly with many hard thoughts about Crato. But one of them directed on me the fierce gaze of a Titan, seized my robe and started to tear it, for that old devil ¹ kept urging and goading him to make a speech.

23. After a conversation of some length between us,² I had the misfortune to be persuaded by him to meet with mountebank fellows and, to use the common saying, to strike an unlucky day. For he said he had been initiated into everything by these men. And behold we passed through the gates of iron and o'er the thresholds of bronze,³ and after we had twisted and turned our way up many steps, we found ourselves up in a golden-roofed residence such as was possessed by Menelaus according to Homer. And behold I surveyed everything with the curiosity of that young islander of his.⁴ But what I saw, by Jove, was not Helen but men with downcast heads and pale faces.

"On seeing me their hearts were filled with joy"⁵ and they came to meet me; for they kept asking if we had brought any bad news. For they appeared to be praying for the worst, and rejoiced in things of sorrow like singers of dirges in the theatre. They kept putting their heads close together and whispering. After all this they questioned me, saying,

"What man art thou and whence? Where stands your town,

Where do your parents dwell?"⁶

For from your appearance you must be an honourable man."

THE PATRIOT

I replied, " Few men are honourable, to judge from what I see everywhere. My name is Critias, and I come from the same city as you."

24. Then, like men with their heads in the clouds, they asked how things were in the city and in the world, and I said, " All men are happy and will continue to be so."

But they raised their brows in dissent and said, " It is not so ; the city is pregnant with evil."

Agreeing with them, I said, " Because you are raised on high and are like men who look down on everything from aloft, you have been most keensighted in perceiving this too. But how of things in the sky ? Will there be an eclipse of the sun ? Will the moon rise on a vertical course ? Will Mars be in quartile aspect with Jupiter, and Saturn be diametrically opposite to the sun ? Will Venus be in conjunction with Mercury, so that they produce the Hermaphrodites in whom you find such pleasure ? Will they send torrential rain ? Will they bestrew the earth with drifts of snow ? Will they bring down hail and blight ? Will they send upon us pestilence and famine and drought ? Is the vessel of the thunderbolt empty ? Is the receptacle of the lightning replenished ? "

25. But they like people with everything arranged to their liking went on talking their own beloved nonsense, saying that things were to change, that disorders and turmoils would seize the city and her armies succumb to her foes. I, astounded at this and " swelling like a burning oak " ¹ uttered a piercing improves their fortunes. But we, Triepho, have found the most glorious lot of all. For I was distressed by worrying over what to leave my children in my will when I died. For you know my poverty as well as I know what you possess. But it suffices for my children that the Emperor should live ; for then wealth will not fail us, nor any race terrify us.

TRIEPHO

I too, Critias, leave to my children as their heritage that they should see Babylon¹ destroyed, Egypt enslaved, the children of the Persians enduring "chains and slavery,"² the inroads of the Scythians checked and, I pray, utterly defeated. Since we have found the Unknown God of Athens, let us fall down before him with our hands extended to the heavens, and pay him thanks that we have been thought worthy to be made subject to such a power. But the others let us leave to talk their nonsense and concerning them let us be content to say with the proverb, "Hippoclides doesn't care."³

CHARIDEMUS

It is generally agreed that this work is not by Lucian. It is not found in the better MSS. of Lucian, and both its Greek and its uninspired contents are quite unworthy of him. The author is presumably a sophist of quite unknown date, who knew his Lucian as he introduces several of Lucian's motifs and Homeric quotations, though he is also influenced by Plato and Xenophon, and draws heavily from Isocrates' Helen, particularly in cc. 16-18 which are largely a paraphrase of Helen 18-20, 39-43 and 50-53. The careful, and mostly successful, avoidance of hiatus is also worth noting.

CHARIDEMUS or ON BEAUTY

HERMIPPUS

1. I was taking a stroll in the suburbs yesterday, Charidemus, both for relaxation in the fields and also because I had something on my mind and needed peace and quiet, when lo and behold I met Proxenus, the son of Épícrates. After greeting him in my usual fashion, I asked where he'd come from and where he was going. He said he too had come there for the refreshment he'd always found in looking at the fields, and also to enjoy the mild and gentle breezes that blew over them. He'd come from an excellent party at the Piræus in the house of Androcles, son of Epichares; Androcles had been sacrificing to Hermes by way of thanks for his victory with the book he'd read at the Diasia.¹ 2. He told me that it had been an occasion that evoked much wit and culture and, in particular, praises of beauty had been pronounced by the men. These he could not report to me, he said, because his old age had impaired his memory, and in any case he had not taken much part in the conversation, but he said you would have no difficulty in recounting them, as you had yourself pronounced an encomium and had paid attention to all the other speakers throughout the party.

Another of our companions at table was Cleonymus, the handsome nephew of Androcles, a delicate effeminate lad. He seemed, however, not to be lacking in intellect, as he listened very eagerly to the speeches. First to begin speaking about beauty was Philo, whose introductory remarks were as follows :

HERMIPPUS

No, my friend ! Please don't start on the encomia before telling me the reason which led you to discuss this topic.

CHARIDEMUS

You're wasting my time, my good fellow. I could have reported the whole discussion long ago and been on my way. But what is one to do when a friend ² constrains ? educated people present, who were staring at him utterly amazed at his beauty. Scarcely heeding anything else they sat delivering encomia of the boy. We felt and expressed admiration for the men's appreciation of beauty, and thought that it would show the greatest idleness on our part to be outdone by the uneducated in discussing the highest forms of beauty; for in this respect alone do we consider ourselves superior to them. Thus it was that we also started discussing beauty. We decided to pronounce our praises of the boy without mentioning his name, as that would be wrong and merely give him further airs. We agreed to avoid their disorderly, haphazard manner of discussion and that each of us in turn should make his personal contribution on the topic under discussion.

6. Thus it was that Philo began first and spoke as follows: "How scandalous it is that in all our everyday activities we are full of zeal, as though for something beautiful, while beauty itself we hold of no account, but remain seated thus in silence, as though afraid that a word might escape us unawares concerning the thing we pursue zealously all our days! But what would be the right occasion for a man to speak, if he showed zeal for what's worthless and had nothing to say about the most beautiful of all things? And what more beautiful way of preserving the beauty of speech than for us to leave aside all else and talk about the actual end of all our actions? But, so as not to seem to you to claim knowledge of the correct attitude towards this without being able to say anything about it, I shall try as briefly as I can to discourse on this subject.

Beauty is what all men have ever yearned to have, though very few have been considered worthy of it. But those who have had this gift have ever been thought the most fortunate of all and have been fittingly honoured by both gods and men. This can be proved. Among heroes who became gods are Heracles, the son of Zeus, the Dioscuri and Helen. One of these is said to have gained this honour for his bravery, Helen to have changed into a goddess herself on account of her beauty and to have won godhead for the Dioscuri, who had been numbered with those in the underworld ¹ before she ascended to heaven. 7. Moreover one cannot find any humans who've been thought worthy to associate with the gods except for those who've had beauty. For that was why Pelops ² is said to have shared immortality with the gods, and Ganymede, son of Dardanus,³ is said to have mastered the highest of all gods so completely that he could not bear to let any of the other gods share his expedition in pursuit of his darling boy, but thought it an expedition befitting himself alone that he should fly down to Gargaron on Ida ⁴ and take up his darling boy to the place where he would enjoy his company for all time. He has always paid such attention to beauties that not only has he given them a title to life in heaven by taking them up there but he himself, each time he joined his loved ones on earth, would become anything at all, now becoming a swan to court Leda, now in described as "child of Dardanus," because Dardanus was the founder of Troy.

⁴ Ida was a mountain near Troy, and Gargaron one of its peaks. Cf. Iliad VIII. 48, Dialogues of the Gods 10, Judgement of the Goddesses, 1 and 5.

the shape of a bull carrying off Europa, or adopting the likeness of Amphitryon to produce Heracles. One can enumerate many devices adopted by Zeus in his schemes for enjoying the company of those who excited his desire.

8. But what is the most important thing and a surprising one is that in his conversations with the gods—he had none with any human beings unless they were beautiful—in his harangues amongst the gods, I say, he has been depicted as being so dashing, bold and terrifying by the poet of all Greeks alike,¹ that in his earlier speech ² he so frightened Hera that, though she had been used before that to censure everything he did, she was then content to escape unharmed and allow the anger to Zeus to be confined to words. Again, in his later speech,³ he struck no less fear into all the gods by his threats to pull up land and sea and all men with them. Yet, when he's about to keep company with beauties, he becomes so kind and gentle and so completely reasonable that, in addition to all else, he even leaves off being Zeus, and, so as not to appear unpleasing to his darlings, he adopts some other appearance, and, what's more, one that's very beautiful and likely to attract the beholder. Such is the respect and honour shown by him to beauty.

9. And, so that these words may not be thought to be spoken in criticism of Zeus rather than in defence of beauty, let me tell you that Zeus isn't the only god so to have become the captive of beauty. No, any-one willing to consider the matter carefully would find that all the gods have been affected in the same way as Zeus. For example, Posidon fell victim to Pelops,¹ Apollo to Hyacinthus,² and Hermes to Cadmus.³ 10. Goddesses too are not ashamed to reveal their subjection to beauty, but seem to take a sort of pride in intercourse with this or that beautiful man, and giving accounts of the favours they've bestowed on men. Furthermore, in the wide range of all other customary pursuits, each goddess is a patroness of one particular thing and never quarrels with another over her sphere of power, for Athena is leader of men in matters of war but does not compete against Artemis in the chase, while she in the same way yields to Athena in military matters, and, where marriage is concerned, Hera yields to Aphrodite, while in her own department she meets with no interference from her. But each so prides herself on her beauty and thinks herself so superior to all others that, when Discord wished to make them fight against each other, she merely made beauty the issue amongst them, for she thought that thus she would easily achieve her wish, and her calculations were shrewd and accurate. One can see the pre-eminence of beauty from this: when they had taken up the apple and read the inscription, since each assumed the apple was hers, and none of them would vote against herself and admit her inferiority in looks to another, they went up to Zeus, who was the father of two of them, and brother and husband to the third, to entrust the decision to him. But though he could himself have pronounced who was the most beautiful and though there were many brave, wise and intelligent men in Greece and elsewhere, yet he entrusted the decision to Paris, son of Priam, and thereby gave a clear honest vote to show that beauty is superior to intellect, wisdom and strength.

11. These goddesses have always been so eager and zealous to hear their beauty praised that they have persuaded the glorifier of heroes and poet of the gods¹ to take the names he gives them only from their beauty. Thus Hera would prefer to be called "white-armed" than "reverend goddess, daughter of mighty Cronos," Athena would not choose to be called "Trito-born" rather than "grey-eyed," and Aphrodite will set the highest store on being called "golden." All these words refer to beauty.

12. Indeed this not only shows the attitude of the mighty to this question but is also an infallible proof of the superiority of beauty to everything else. Thus Athena's verdict is that it is superior both to courage and intellect, for she was patroness of both these, while Hera proclaims that beauty is preferable to all power and authority, and she also had Zeus to support her plea. If then beauty is so divine and august and taken so very seriously by the gods, how would it be right for us not to imitate the gods ourselves in word and deed and use all we have in the service of beauty?"

13. Such was the speech on beauty made by Philo, who added at the end of it that he would have said more had he not known that long speeches are unpopular at dinners. Immediately after him Aristippus began to speak, though only after much persuasion by Androcles, since he was chary of following

14. "Many men have on many occasions forgone discussion of the topics best and most advantageous to us and have embarked upon other subjects from which they think they bring themselves renown, although to their audience their words are of no profit. In their expositions some of them vie with each other on the same topics, some impart information that is untrue, while others discourse on quite unessential topics, though they ought to have left all these aside and been at pains to say something of greater value. Since I think that they have formed no sound opinion of the truth and since moreover I consider it quite inane to accuse people of mistaking the highest ideal and then to be guilty of the same oneself, I shall make the subject of my speech at once most profitable and most beautiful to my hearers, and one which anyone at all would admit to be ideal to hear.

15. If, then, we were now discussing anything other than beauty, we should have been satisfied to have a single speech and be rid of the subject; but this topic affords such boundless scope to those wishing to embark upon its discussion that a man does not consider himself unlucky if his speech should fail to do justice to the subject, but rather does he consider himself comparatively fortunate if he can add to the praises paid by many others some contribution of his own. men, when something is the most proper ornament of all living things, making its possessors to be courted by all, while its absence makes men hated and unfit to be seen, who, I ask, could be eloquent enough to praise that thing as it deserves? However, since it needs so many to praise it that it can scarcely receive its due, it is in no way unfitting for me too to say something about it, even though I shall be speaking after Philo. Indeed, it is so much the most august and divine of all things that—but I won't go into all the ways in which gods have honoured beauties.

16. Be that as it may, in olden times Helen, daughter of Zeus, excited such admiration amongst all men that, even before she had reached marriageable age, Theseus, who had gone to the Peloponnese on some business, upon seeing her, was struck with such admiration for her beauty that, though he had the most assured of thrones and no ordinary glory, he considered that life would be intolerable without her, whereas he would surpass all men in good fortune, should it fall to him to have her for wife. With these thoughts in his mind, rejecting the idea of receiving her in marriage from her father, since he knew that he wouldn't give her before she had reached marriageable age, and, because he held her father's power in contempt and scorn and despised everything formidable in the Peloponnese, Theseus took Peirithoüs with him to help carry her off, and, after seizing her against her father's will, brought her to Aphidna in Attica. He conceived such gratitude to Peirithoüs for aiding him in this that he loved him so dearly for the rest of his days that the friendship of Theseus and Peirithoüs became an example even for later generations. When Peirithoüs for his part had to go to Hades to court the daughter of Demeter, and Theseus despite his many pleas could not dissuade him from this enterprise, Theseus went with him, thinking that he would thus fittingly pay his debt of gratitude by risking his life for him. 17. Helen returned to Argos during another absence of Theseus, when she was now of marriageable age, and, though the kings of Greece had no lack of beautiful well-born women to marry, they ignored all other women as inferior and assembled to court her. Since they realised that she would be fought for and they feared that Greece would be cast into war if they fought against each other, by common agreement they took a solemn oath to support the man thought worthy of Helen, and not to allow anyone to attempt anything unjust, since each thought that thus he was securing allies for himself. All accordingly failed in their private aim except Menelaüs, but they very soon put their common aim to the test. For shortly afterwards a quarrel about beauty started among the goddesses, and they left the decision to Paris, son of Priam. Though overpowered by the physical attractions of the goddesses, he was compelled to decide between the gifts they offered. When Hera offered him the kingdom of Asia, Athena prowess in war and Aphrodite marriage with Helen, he reflected that, while mean fellows might on occasion obtain a kingdom as great, the privilege of Helen's favours would fall to nobody of a future generation, and so preferred marriage with her.

18. γενομένης δὲ τῆς ὑμνουμένης ἐκείνης στρατείας κατὰ τῶν Τρώων καὶ τῆς Εὐρώπης τότε πρῶτον κατὰ τῆς Ἀσίας ἐλθούσης, ἔχοντες οἱ τε Τρῶες ἀποδόντες τὴν Ἑλένην ἀδεῶς οἰκεῖν τὴν αὐτῶν, οἱ θ' Ἕλληνες ταύτην αὐτοὺς ἐάσαντες ἔχειν ἀπαλλάττεσθαι τῶν ἐκ πολέμου καὶ στρατείας δυσχερῶν, οἱ δ' οὐκ ἠβουλήθησαν ἀμφότεροι, οὐκ ἂν ποτε νομίσαντες εὐρεῖν ἀφορμὴν καλλίῳ πολέμου περὶ ἧς ἀποθανοῦνται. καὶ θεοὶ δὲ τοὺς αὐτῶν παῖδας σαφῶς εἰδότες ἀπολουμένους ἐν τῷ πολέμῳ οὐκ ἀπέτρεψαν μᾶλλον, ἀλλ' ἐνήγαγον εἰς τοῦτο οὐκ ἐλάττω δόξαν αὐτοῖς οἰόμενοι φέρειν τοῦ θεῶν παῖδας γενέσθαι τὸ μαχομένους ὑπὲρ Ἑλένης ἀποθανεῖν. καὶ τί λέγω τοὺς αὐτῶν παῖδας; αὐτοὶ πρὸς αὐτοὺς μείζω καὶ δεινότερον ἐνεστήσαντο τοῦ πρὸς Γίγαντας αὐτοῖς γενομένου πολέμου· ἐν ἐκείνῳ μὲν γὰρ μετ' ἀλλήλων, ἐνταῦθα δὲ ἐμάχοντο πρὸς ἀλλήλους. οὐ τί γένοιτ' ἂν ἐναργέστερον δεῖγμα, ὅσω τῶν ἀνθρωπίνων ἀπάντων ὑπερέχει τὸ κάλλος παρ' ἀθανάτοις κριταῖς; ὅταν γὰρ ὑπὲρ μὲν τῶν ἄλλων οὐδενὸς ἀπάντων οὐδαμοῦ τὸ παράπαν φαίνωνται διενεχθέντες, ὑπὲρ δὲ κάλλους οὐ μόνον τοὺς υἱοὺς ἐπιδεδωκότες, ἀλλ' ἤδη καὶ ἀλλήλοις ἐναντία πεπολεμηκότες, ἔνιοι δὲ καὶ τρωθέντες, πῶς οὐχ ἀπάσαι ψήφοις προτιμῶσιν ἀπάντων τὸ κάλλος;

18. When that celebrated expedition had been made against the Trojans and Europe then for the first time had invaded Asia, though the Trojans could have given Helen back and lived without fear in their own country, and the Greeks could have allowed them to keep Helen and be rid of the hardships of war and campaigning, nevertheless neither side proved willing to do so, since they thought they'd never find a war with a better cause for which to die. The gods too, though well aware that their own sons would die in the war, did nothing to stop them but encouraged them, thinking it brought them no less glory to die fighting for Helen than to have been born sons of gods. But why talk of the children of the gods? The gods themselves then engaged with each other in a mightier and more terrible war than the one they had fought against the Giants. For in that they fought alongside each other, but on this occasion they fought against each other. What clearer proof than this could there be to show how much beauty excels everything else connected with men in the judgment of the immortals? For, when they can be clearly seen never to have quarrelled over anything else at all, and yet for beauty not only to have sacrificed their sons but once even to have fought against each other and some of them even to have suffered wounds, are they not showing by a unanimous vote that they value beauty above all else?

19. But, lest I be thought for want of things to say about beauty to be lingering on the same theme for ever, I wish to pass to another proof of the merit of beauty no less weighty than what I've just been saying and to tell of Hippodamia, the daughter of Oenomaüs of Arcadia, and all those victims of her beauty whom she induced to choose death in preference to the light of day, if parted from her. For, once she was of age, and her father saw that she far surpassed all other women, he was overpowered by her beauty, for she had such a superabundance of it that her own father was unnaturally attracted to her. He therefore wished to keep her for himself, but in order to escape the censure of men, he pretended to be willing to give her in marriage to the man worthy of her, and devised a plan even more wicked than his lust and one which he thought would easily secure him what he wished. For he would yoke the swiftest horses then in Arcadia to a chariot skilfully constructed to ensure the greatest possible speed and compete against his daughter's suitors, offering her to them as the prize of victory, if they passed him, or death if they were defeated. He also insisted that she should mount the chariot with them so that they might be distracted by her and their attention wander from their horsemanship. But, after the first competitor in the race had proved unsuccessful and lost the maiden as well as his life, the others, considering it puerile to show fear for the contest or to change any of their plans and detesting Oenomaüs' cruelty, vied one with another in being first to die, as though afraid they might lose the chance of dying for the maiden. And so the butchery went on till thirteen young men had died. But the gods were filled with hatred for Oenomaüs for being so wicked, while they pitied the victims and also the maiden, them because of the prize they'd lost and her because she wasn't having the proper enjoyment of her beauty, and were also concerned for the young man, Pelops by name, who was about to enter the contest. They therefore presented him with a chariot even more skilfully constructed than that of Oenomaüs and with immortal steeds. These were to enable him to gain possession of the maiden, which he did after he had killed his father-in-law at the end of his victorious race.

20. Thus beauty is regarded by men as something divine, and valued as all-important, and many are the places to which its eager pursuit has taken the gods. Therefore no one could justly blame me for considering that this discourse of mine on beauty serves a useful purpose."

to hear their words as yours. If therefore you deprive us of that, all your efforts so far will have been in vain. By Hermes, I beg you, give me the full discussion, as you promised at the outset.

CHARIDEMUS

It would have been better for you to be content with this much and relieve me of an unpleasant task. But since you are so set on hearing my speech also, I must oblige you with this further favour. This then was how my speech went :

22. " If I were beginning the first speech on beauty, I should need many introductory remarks, but since I am following many previous speakers, it seems reasonable for me to treat their speeches as introductory remarks and continue the argument where they left off, since the discussions are not being held in two different places, but here, and at one and the same time, so that it's possible even for those present to forget that each of us is not making a speech of his own, but each is proceeding in turn with the same discussion. Therefore what each of you has said individually about beauty would be sufficient to bring honour to any other man, but I have the very much greater task of ensuring that later generations too shall be well supplied with praises of beauty over and above those just delivered. For beauty brings to one's mind from many quarters a great many ideas, each of which one feels one should mention first, as though one were in a meadow rich with flowers, where each successive bloom that appears invites one to pick it. I shall choose out of everything those points which I feel should not be omitted, and speak briefly, so that I may pay due tribute to beauty and also act in a way acceptable to you by refraining from a long speech.

23. Those whom we think superior to ourselves for courage or in any other virtue tend to incur our envy, unless by their daily benefactions they force us to be well disposed to them ; as a result of this the things they undertake may not go well for them. But so far are we from envying the beautiful for their loveliness that, immediately we see them, we become their captives, show them inordinate affection and unhesitatingly act as their slaves in every way we can, as though they were our superiors. Thus one would more gladly obey someone blessed with beauty than issue orders to a person without beauty, and one would feel more gratitude to the beauty who gives many orders than the one who gives none at all.

24. Our enthusiasm for all other good things which we lack ends when we obtain them, but of beauty we have never ever had too much ; no, even if we surpass the son of Aglaia,¹ who once set sail with the Achaeans for Troy, or beautiful Hyacinthus, or Narcissus of Lacedaemon, we are not satisfied, but are afraid that we may unwittingly be surpassed in beauty by later generations. 25. Beauty is, as it were, the universal ideal in very nearly every human activity ; beauty is considered by generals in arraying their armies, by orators in composing their speeches, and moreover by artists in painting their portraits. But why should I only mention those things which have beauty for their end ? For, in constructing the things which we have come to find indispensable, we show the greatest zeal for making them as beautiful as possible. For Menelaus was not so much concerned with using his palace as with astonishing his visitors ; that is why he lavished such wealth on its construction and made it so very beautiful. Moreover he succeeded in his purpose, for the son of Odysseus ¹ is said, when visiting Menelaus in search of news about his father, to have admired it so much that he said to Peisistratus, son of Nestor “Twas like being in the palace of Olympian Zeus.”² Furthermore Odysseus himself, the boy’s father, had ships ‘with cheeks of red’³ simply because he wished to be able to astonish those that saw them. And, if one cares to examine each of the arts and crafts, one will find that they all more or less aim at beauty and regard the achieving of beauty as all-important.

26. Beauty is thought so superior to everything else that, though one could find many things more honoured than those that partake of justice or wisdom or courage, nothing can be found better than the things informed with beauty, just as indeed nothing is held in less honour than the things without beauty. At any rate it’s only those lacking beauty that we call ugly, since we regard any other advantage possessed by a man as immaterial if he be without beauty. 27. Therefore those who transact state affairs for citizens of a democracy and those subject to tyrants are called by us demagogues and toadies respectively, but we reserve our admiration for those subject to the power of beauty, calling those who show concern for the beautiful diligent and aesthetic and regarding them as common benefactors. When, therefore, beauty is so revered and so much a part of all men's prayers, and, when people count it gain to be able to serve it in any way, could we not have been blamed with good cause if, when able to gain so great a benefit, we have been wilfully relinquishing it without even being able to see that we're punishing ourselves?"

28. Such was the extent of my speech, for I excluded from it many of the things which I could have said about beauty, because I could see that the discussion was becoming protracted.

HERMIPPUS

How lucky you are to have enjoyed such a discussion! Still, thanks to you, I have now become almost as lucky as you.

NERO

NERO is attributed to Lucian in N and two other Lucianic manuscripts, but there can be little doubt that it is the work of one of the three Philostrati, and probably of the first Philostratus, whose other works have been lost though their titles are listed in the Suda, rather than his son, Philostratus the "Athenian," who wrote The Life of Apollonius of Tyana for the empress Julia Domna, though her death in 217 A.D. seems to have preceded its publication. The reasons for ascribing Nero to a Philostratus are as follows :

(1) The style is quite unlike that of Lucian, but in the view of C. L. Kayser, the Teubner editor, it is very like that of the Philostrati.

(2) C. 4 of Nero is very like The Life of Apollonius 4.24, while the only other mention of Musonius digging at Corinth rather than being in exile at Gyara is ibid. 5.19. Note that elsewhere the "Athenian" mentions Musonius as imprisoned, presumably at Rome (ibid. 4.35 and 4.46), and as under detention in Gyara (ibid. 7.16).

(3) The title Nero is included in the Suda's list of the works of the first Philostratus. (It must however be borne in mind that the Suda's evidence is often unreliable, and in this instance it arouses misgivings by describing the first Philostratus as a contemporary of Nero, while in an adjacent article describing his son as alive almost 200 years later. Furthermore it is not quite certain that Θεατής which follows Nero in the Suda's list of titles is to be separated from it.)

(4) K. Mras, Die Ueberlieferung Lucians, p. 236 notes that a few Lucianic manuscripts also contain the works of Philostratus and other sophists, so that Nero might have been mistaken for the last work of Lucian rather than the first of Philostratus in such a codex.

(5) Lemnos, the home of the Philostrati, is mentioned in c. 6.

Kayser and F. Solmsen, Transactions of the American Philological Association, 1940, pp. 556 ff., think that Nero is by the author of The Life of Apollonius, but this theory is perhaps to be rejected in view of the evidence of the Suda and The Life of Apollonius 5.19 fin., which looks like a polite reference to another writer.

A more probable view is that of K. Münscher, who following the Suda, ascribes Nero to the first Philostratus. This view is developed by J. Korver, Mnemosyne, 1950, p. 319 ff., who suggests that the dialogue was inspired by Caracalla's murder of his brother Geta in 212 A.D. and that Nero's fate is meant to serve as a warning to Caracalla to curb his vicious behaviour before it is too late.

The dramatic date of the dialogue is 68 A.D. and the scene is probably Gyara, a small island of the Cyclades, which Menecrates is visiting from Lemnos. (Alternatively the scene could be Lemnos, though Musonius' presence there would then be unaccounted for.) One of the speakers is Musonius Rufus, the famous Stoic philosopher, who was banished by Nero to Gyara, but later returned to Rome and received favourable treatment from Vespasian. The other speaker, Menecrates, is usually taken to be an imaginary character. Nero, however, had a favourite lyre-player of that name (cf. Suetonius, Nero, 30, Dio Cassius 63.1 and Petronius 73.19), so that it is a strange coincidence that the Menecrates of this dialogue should ask about Nero's musical accomplishments. The Menecrates of Nero could therefore be the historical Menecrates; if so, it is most unrealistic for him to ask questions to which he knows the answers; more probably the writer has forgotten Menecrates' connection with Nero, just as he blunders in other ways (cf. notes on cc. 2 and 5).

NERO or THE DIGGING OF THE ISTHMUS

MENECRATES

1. Tell me, Musonius, about the digging of the Isthmus, for people say that you took part in it with your own hands. Did that enterprise reveal a Greek spirit on the part of the emperor ?

MUSONIUS

I can assure you, Menecrates, that Nero's intentions were even better than Greek ; for by breaking through two and a half miles of the Isthmus he proposed to save seafarers the voyage round the Peloponnese past Cape Malea. This would have benefited not only commerce but also the coastal and inland cities ; for the inland cities find their home produce sufficient for their needs when the seaboard prospers.

MENECRATES

Tell us about this, Musonius, for we are all of us eager to hear, if you've no other serious business in mind.

I'll tell you, since it is your wish ; for I don't know any better way of obliging those who have come for serious study to such an austere schoolroom. 2. Nero, then, had been brought to Greece by the call of music and his own exaggerated conviction that even the Muses could not surpass the sweetness of his song. He even wished to win a victor's crown for song at the Olympic games, where if anywhere the contests are for athletes¹; for the Pythian games he regarded as belonging to himself more than they did to Apollo; for he believed that not even Apollo would dare play the lyre or sing in competition with him. But the Isthmus had no part in the plans which he had formed from far away; it was only when he had seen what the place was like that he fell in love with a grandiose scheme, when he thought of the king² who once led the Achaeans against Troy and how he severed Euboea from Boeotia by digging the Euripus at Chalcis, and when moreover he thought how Darius³ had bridged the Bosphorus to attack the Scythians. Perhaps even before either of these he had thought of the feat⁴ of Xerxes, the mightiest of all mighty works, and how moreover by giving men a short route of access to each other he would make it possible for foreigners to enjoy the glorious hospitality of Greece. For tyrannical natures, though intoxicated, yet somehow thirst to hear praises⁵ of this sort. 3. He advanced from his tent and sang a hymn in honour of Amphitrite and Poseidon and a ditty addressed to Melicerte and Leucothea.⁶ After the governor of Greece⁷ had handed him a golden fork he fell to digging amid clapping and chants of applause. When he had directed blows at the ground to the number of three, I believe, and exhorted those delegated to start the work to tackle their task with energy, he went to Corinth believing he had surpassed all the feats of Heracles. The men from the prison started toiling away at the rocky and difficult ground, while the army worked where there was soil and flat ground.

¹ C. 4 is very similar to the Life of Apollonius 4.24 which

4. When we had now been chained to the Isthmus for seventy-five days,¹ an unconfirmed report came from Corinth that Nero had changed his mind about cutting the Isthmus. They say that the Egyptians when calculating the features of both seas had found they were not both at the same level but thought the sea on the Lechaëum² side was higher and were afraid for Aegina; for they thought it would be swamped and carried away if so mighty a sea poured over the island. But Nero would not have been dissuaded from cutting the Isthmus even by Thales, the wisest of men and greatest natural philosopher; for he had a greater passion for cutting it than for singing in public. 5. But the revolt of the Western nations and the fact that the energetic Vindex has now joined it have forced Nero to leave Greece and the Isthmus³ after his inane calculations; for I know that the seas keep the same level as the land and as each other. They say that affairs at Rome says that four stades (half-a-mile) of the digging had been completed.

² The whole historical and chronological background to the dialogue is muddled; in particular (cf. Suetonius, Nero 40) Nero was at Naples when he heard the news from Gaul. Cf. also Life of Apollonius 4.24, which describes Nero's plans about the canal as dating from the seventh year of his reign (i.e. c. 61 A.D.).

6. But tell me, Musonius, about that voice of his which makes him mad about music and enamoured of Olympian and Pythian victories. What is the tyrant's voice like? For some of those who have sailed to Lemnos expressed admiration for it, while others laughed at it.

MUSONIUS

But in fact, my dear Menecrates, his voice deserves neither admiration nor yet ridicule, for nature has made him tolerably and moderately tuneful. His voice is naturally hollow and low,¹ as his throat is deep set, and his singing has a sort of buzzing sound because his throat is thus constituted. However, the pitch of his voice makes him seem less rough when he puts his trust not in his natural powers but in gentle modifications, attractive melody and adroit harp-playing, in choosing the right time to walk, stop and move, and in swaying his head in time to the music; then the only disgraceful feature is that a king should seem to strive for perfection in these accomplishments.

7. Should he ape his superiors, then, good heavens, what laughter emanates from the audience despite the countless threats hanging over the head of anyone laughing at him! For he holds his breath and sways fame and admiration, was unusually ostentatious in pretending that he had set his heart on the crown of victory and wouldn't give it up before Nero gave him ten talents as the price of victory. Nero was mad with rage ; for he had been listening under the stage during the actual contest. When the Greeks shouted in applause of the Epirote, Nero sent his secretary to bid him yield to him. But he raised his voice and went on competing as if they were all free and equal, till Nero sent his own actors on to the platform as though they belonged to the act. cavity¹ from which the oracular utterances came wafting up, so that not even Apollo should have a voice. And yet the Pythian god had merely classed him with men like Orestes and Alcmaeon, to whom matricide even gave some claim to renown, since they had avenged their fathers. But he, though quite unable to say whom he had avenged, considered himself insulted by the god, though he had been described in kinder terms than the truth warranted.

11. But what is this ship which has been approaching while we have been talking? It seems to bring good news, for they have garlands on their head like a chorus that has good tidings to tell. Someone is stretching out his hand from the prow, bidding us be of good courage and rejoice. He is shouting, unless my ears deceive me, that Nero is dead.

MENEKRATES

Yes, he is shouting that, and all the more clearly the nearer he draws to the land. The gods be praised.

MUSONIUS

No, let us not thank the gods, for they say we should not do so where the dead are concerned.

EPIGRAMS

FIFTY-THREE epigrams in all have been attributed to Lucian. Some of these are without doubt the work of others ; but those who reject all fifty-three as non-Lucianic are perhaps going too far, as at least a few are not un-Lucianic in style and thought. Here it is only necessary to print the spurious epigram On his Own Book which is quoted in Photius, Bibliotheca, 128 fin., and also occurs in a few inferior MSS. of Lucian ; the other fifty-two have already been included by Paton in the five L.C.L. volumes of the Greek Anthology, having reached us from that source rather than through manuscripts of Lucian. Epigrams ascribed to Lucian in Paton's edition of the Anthology are :

49	1	306	(VI. 17)
50	4	262	(XI. 402)
52	4	262	(XI. 401)

Paton's edition gives the authorship of the other epigrams printed in the Teubner Lucian as follows :

29	5	250	(XVI. 154) : Lucian or Archias
7	4	18	(X. 30) : Anon.
13	3	38	(IX. 74) : Anon.
15	4	62	(X. 122) : Lucilius
17	4	24	(X. 43) : Anon.

EPIGRAMS

20	4	110	(XI. 80)	: Lucilius
21	4	112	(XI. 81)	: Lucilius
24	4	184	(XI. 239)	: Lucilius
25	4	132	(XI. 129)	: Cerealis
27	4	72	(XI. 10)	: Lucilius
33	1	308	(VI. 20)	: Julian
40	4	264	(XI. 405)	: probably Nicarchus
51	4	272	(XI. 420)	: Anon.
53	4	172	(XI. 212)	: Lucilius

34.1. 382 (VI. 164) is perhaps by Lucilius, though Paton assigns it to Lucian. (XI. 411 is anon., though attributed to Lucian in the index to vol. IV.)

ΕΠΙΓΡΑΜΜΑ

Εἰς τὴν ἑαυτοῦ βίβλον.

Λουκιανὸς τάδ' ἔγραψα¹ παλαιά τε μωρά τε εἰδώς, μωρὰ γὰρ ἀνθρώποις καὶ τὰ δοκοῦντα σοφά.
οὐδὲν ἐν ἀνθρώποισι διακριδόν² ἔστι νόημα, ἀλλ' ὃ σὺ θαυμάζεις, τοῦθ' ἑτέροισι γέλως.

² διάκριτον Guyet.

EPIGRAM

"ON HIS OWN BOOK"

This is the work of Lucian's pen,
Who follies knew of bygone men.
For e'en the things considered wise
Are nought but folly in mine eyes.
No single thought that men embrace
Can merit have or pride of place.
For what seems wonderful to thee
Others deride with mockery.
